PAPIST. n. f. [papiste, Fr. papista, Latin.] One that adheres to the communion of the pope and church of Rome.

The principal clergymen had frequent conferences with the prince, to persuade him to change his religion, and become a papist. Clarendon.

PAPISTICAL. adj. [from papist.] Popish; adherent to popery.

There are some papistical practitioners among you. Whigg.
PAPISTRY. n. f. [from papist.] Popery; the doctrine of the Romish church.

Papistry, as a standing pool, covered and overflowed all England. Afham's Shearwater.

A great number of parishes in England consist of rude and ignorant men, drowned in papistry. Whitefist.

PAPPUS. adj. [pappus, low Latin.] Having that soft light down, growing out of the seeds of some plants; such as thistles, dandelion, hawk-weeds, which buoy them up so in the air, that they can be blown any where about with the wind: and, therefore, this distinguishes one kind of plants, which is called papposa, or pappus flowers. Quincy.

Another thing argumentative of providence is, that pappous plumage growing upon the tops of some seeds, whereby they are wafted with the wind, and by that means disseminated far and wide. Ray on the Creation.

Dandelion, and most of the pappous kind, have long numerous feathers, by which they are wafted every way. Derb.
PAPPY. adj. [from pap.] Soft; succulent; easily divided.

These were converted into fens, where the ground, being spungy, sucked up the water, and the loosen'd earth swell'd into a soft and pappy substance. Burnet.

Its tender and pappy flesh cannot, at once, be fitted to be nourished by solid diet. Ray on the Creation.

PAR. n. f. [Latin.] State of equality; equivalence; equal value. This word is not elegantly used, except as a term of traffick.

To estimate the par, it is necessary to know how much silver is in the coins of the two countries, by which you charge the bill of exchange. Locke.

My friend is the second after the treasurer; the rest of the great officers are much upon a par. Gulliver's Travels.

PARABLE. adj. [parablis, Latin.] Easily procured. Not in use.

They were not well wivers unto parable physic, or remedies easily acquired, who desired medicines from the phoenix. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PARABLE. n. f. [παράβολον, parabole, Fr.] A similitude; a relation under which something else is figured.

Balaam took up his parable, and said. Numbers, xxiii. 7. He spake many things in parables. Matt. xiii. 3.

What is thy fulsome parable to me? Dryden.

PARABOLA. n. f. [Latin.]
 The parabola is a conick section, arising from a cone's being cut by a plane parallel to one of its sides, or parallel to a plane that touches one side of the cone. Harris.

Had the velocities of the several planets been greater or less than they are now, at the same distances from the sun, they would not have revolved in concentrick circles as they do, but have moved in hyperbola's or parabola's, or in ellipses, very excentrick. Bentley's Sermons.

PARABOLICAL. adj. [parabolique, Fr. from parabole.]

PARABOLICK. adj. [parabolique, Fr. from parabole.]

1. Expressed by parable or similitude.

Such from the text delery the parabolical exposition of Cajetan. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The whole scheme of these words is figurative, as being a parabolical description of God's vouchsafing to the world the invaluable blessing of the gospel, by the similitude of a king. South's Sermons.

2. Having the nature or form of a parabola. [from parabola.]
 The pellucid coat of the eye doth not lie in the same superficies with the white of the eye, but riseth up a hillock above its convexity, and is of an hyperbolical or parabolical figure. Ray on the Creation.

The incident ray will describe, in the refracting medium, the parabolick curve. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

PARABOLICALLY. adv. [from parabolical.]

1. By way of parable or similitude.

These words, notwithstanding parabolically intended, admit no literal inference. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. In the form of a parabola.

PARABOLISM. n. f. In algebra, the division of the terms of an equation, by a known quantity that is involved or multiplied in the first term. Diéz.

PAR

PARABOLOID. n. f. [παράβολον and ἰδῶν.] A paraboliform curve in geometry, whose ordinates are supposed to be in suptriplicate, subquadruplicate, &c. ratio of their respective abscissæ: There is another species; for if you suppose the parameter, multiplied into the square of the abscissa, to be equal to the cube of the ordinate; then the curve is called a femicubical paraboloid. Harris.

PARACENTE'SIS. n. f. [παράκέντησις, parakentesis, to pierce. paracente, Fr.] That operation, whereby any of the venters are perforated to let out any matter; as tapping in a tympany. Quincy.

PARACENTRICAL. adj. [παρά και κέντρον.] Deviating from

PARACENTRICK. adj. circularity.

Since the planets move in the elliptick orbits, in one of whose foci the sun is, and, by a radius from the sun, describe equal areas in equal times, we must find out a law for the paracentrinal motion, that may make the orbits elliptic. Cheyne.

PARADE. n. f. [parade, Fr.]

1. Shew; ostentation.

He is not led forth as to a review, but as to a parade; not adorned for parade, but execution. Granville.

The rites perform'd, the parson paid,
 In state retired the grand parade. Swift.

Be rich; but of your wealth make no parade,
 At least, before your master's debts are paid. Swift.

2. Military order.

The cherubim stood arm'd
 To their night-watches in warlike parade. Milton.

3. Place where troops draw up to do duty and mount guard.

4. Guard; posture of defence.

Accustom him to make judgment of men by their infide, which often shews itself in little things, when they are not in parade, and upon their guard. Locke on Education.

PARADIGM. n. f. [παράδειγμα.] Example.

PARADIS'ACAL. adj. [from paradis.] Suiting paradise; making paradise.

The antients express the situation of paradisical earth in reference to the sea. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Such a mediocrity of heat would be so far from exalting the earth to a more happy and paradisical state, that it would turn it to a barren wilderness. Woodv. Nat. Hist.

The summer is a kind of heaven, when we wander in a paradisical scene, among groves and gardens; but, at this season, we are like our poor first parents, turned out of that agreeable, though solitary life, and forced to look about for more people to help to bear our labours, to get into warmer houses, and have together in cities. Pope.

PARADISE. n. f. [παράδεισος; paradise, Fr.]

1. The blissful regions, in which the first pair was placed.

Longer in that paradise to dwell,
 The law I gave to nature him forbids. Milton.

2. Any place of felicity.

What fool is not to wife,
 To lose an oath to win a paradise. Shakespeare.

Consideration, like an angel, came,
 And whipt th' offending Adam out of him;
 Leaving his body as a paradise. Shakespeare.

T' envelope and contain celestial spirits.

If ye should lead her into a fool's paradise,
 It were very gross behaviour. Shakespeare. Romeo and Juliet.

Why, nature, bower the spirit of a fiend
 In mortal paradise of such sweet flesh. Shakespeare.

The earth

Shall all be paradise, far happier place,
 Than this of Eden, and far happier days. Milton.

PARADOX. n. f. [παράδοξος, Fr. παράδοξος.] A tenet contrary to received opinion; an assertion contrary to appearance; a gloss in appearance absurd.

A gloss there is to colour that paradox, and make it appear in shew not to be altogether unreasonable. Hobbes.

You undergo too strict a paradox.

Striving to make an ugly deed look fair. Shakespeare.

In their love of God, men can never be too affectionate: it is as true, though it may seem a paradox, that in their hatred of sin, men may be sometimes too passionate. Strat.

PARADOXICAL. adj. [from paradox.]

1. Having the nature of a paradox.

What hath been every where opinioned by all men, is more than paradoxical to dispute. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Strange it is, how the curiosity of men, that have been active in the instruction of beasts, among those many paradoxical and unheard-of imitations, should not attempt to make one speak. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

These will seem strange and paradoxical to one that takes a prospect of the world. Norris.

2. Inclined to new tenets, or notions contrary to received opinions.

PARADOXICALLY. adv. [from paradox.] In a paradoxical manner; in a manner contrary to received opinions.

If their way of appearing singular puts them upon ad-vancing paradoxes, and proving them as paradoxically, they are usually laugh'd at. Collier on Priests.

PARADOXI-

PAR

PARADOXICALNESS. n. f. [from paradox.] State of being paradoxical.

PARADOXOLOGV. n. f. [from paradox.] The use of paradoxes.

Pend the difficulty; which obscurity, or unavoidable paradoxology, must put upon the attempter. Brown.

PARAGOGE. n. f. [παράγωγη; paragoge, Fr.] A figure whereby a letter or syllable is added at the end of a word, without adding any thing to the sense of it. Diéz.

PARAGON. n. f. [paragon, from parage, equality, old French; paragone, Italian.]

1. A model; a pattern; something supremely excellent.

An angel! or, if not,
 An earthly paragon. Shakespeare.

Tunis was never grac'd before with such a paragon to their queen. Shakespeare. Tempest.

2. Companion; fellow.

Alone he rode without his paragon. Spenser.

To PARAGON. v. a. [parangonner, French.]

1. To compare.

The picture of Pamela, in little form, he wore in a tablet, purposing to paragon the little one with Arctia's length, not doubting but even, in that little quantity, the excellency of that would shine through the weakness of the other. Sidney.

I will give thee bloody teeth,
 If thou with Cæsar paragon again. Shakespeare.

My man of men. Shakespeare.

Proud feat
 Of Lucifer, so by allusion call'd
 Of that bright star to Satan paragon'd. Milt. Par. Lost.

2. To equal.

He hath achiev'd a maid
 That paragons description and wild fame;
 One that excels the quirks of blazoning pens. Shakespeare.

We will wear our mortal state with her,
 Catharine our queen, before the primest creature

That's paragon'd i' th' world. Shakespeare. Hen. VIII.

PARAGRAPHS. n. f. [παράγραφη, Fr. παράγραφη.] A distinct part of a discourse.

Of his last paragraph, I have transcribed the most important parts. Swift.

PARAGRAPHICALLY. adv. [from paragraph.] By paragraphs; with distinct breaks or divisions.

PARALLACTICAL. adj. [from parallax.] Pertaining to a

PARALLACTICK. adj. [παράλλαξις.] [parallax.]

PARALLAX. n. f. [παράλλαξις.] The distance between the true and apparent place of the sun, or any star viewed from the surface of the earth.

By what strange parallax or optick skill
 Of vision multiply'd Milton's Paradise Regained.

Light moves from the sun to us in about seven or eight minutes time, which distance is about 70,000,000 English miles, supposing the horizontal parallax of the sun to be about twelve seconds. Newton's Optics.

PARALLEL. adj. [παράλληλος; parallel, Fr.]

1. Extended in the same direction, and preserving always the same distance.

Distorting the order and theory of causes perpendicular to their effects, he draws them aside unto things whereto they run parallel, and their proper motions would never meet together. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Having the same tendency.

When honour runs parallel with the laws of God and our country, it cannot be too much cherished; but when the dictates of honour are contrary to those of religion and equity, they are the great deprivations of human nature. Addison.

3. Continuing the resemblance through many particulars; equal; like.

The foundation principle of peripateticism is exactly parallel to an acknowledged nothing. Glauville.

I shall observe something parallel to the wooing and wedding suit in the behaviour of persons of figure. Addison.

Compare the words and phrases in one place of an author, with the same in other places of the same author, which are generally called parallel places. Watts.

PARALLEL. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. Lines continuing their course, and still remaining at the same distance from each other.

Who made the spider parallel design,
 Sure as De Moivre, without rule or line? Pope.

2. Lines on the globe marking the latitude.

3. Direction conformable to that of another line.

Diffusions, like small streams, are first begun,
 Scarce seen they rise but gather as they run;
 So lines, that from their parallel decline,
 More they proceed, the more they still disjoin. Garth.

4. Resemblance; conformity continued through many particulars; likeness.

Such a resemblance of all parts,
 Life, death, age, fortune, nature, arts;
 She lights her torch at theirs to tell,
 And shew the world this parallel. Denham.

*Twixt earthly females and the moon,
 All parallels exactly run. Swift's Miscel.

PAR

5. Comparison made.

The parallel holds in the gainfulness, as well as laboriousness of the work. Decay of Piety.

A reader cannot be more rationally entertained, than by comparing and drawing a parallel between his own private character, and that of other persons. Addison.

6. Any thing resembling another.

Thou ungrateful brute, if thou wouldst find thy parallel, go to hell, which is both the region and the emblem of ingratitude. South's Sermons.

For works like these, let deathless journals tell,
 None but thyself can be thy parallel. Pope.

To PARALLEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To place, so as always to keep the same direction with another line.

The Azores having a middle situation between these continents and that vast tract of America, the needle seemeth equally distracted by both, and diverting unto neither, doth parallel and place itself upon the true meridian. Brown.

2. To keep in the same direction; to level.

His life is parallel'd

Ev'n with the stroke and line of his great justice. Shakespeare.

3. To correspond to.

That he stretched out the north over the empty places, seems to parallel the expression of David, he stretched out the earth upon the waters. Burnet.

4. To be equal to; to resemble through many particulars.

In the fire, the destruction was so swift, sudden, vast and miserable, as nothing can parallel in story. Dryden.

5. To compare.

I parallel'd more than once, our idea of substance, with the Indian philosopher's he-knew-not-what; which supported the tortoise. Locke.

PARALLELISM. n. f. [parallelisme, Fr. from parallel.] State of being parallel.

The parallelism and due proportioned inclination of the axis of the earth. More's Divine Dialogues.

Speaking of the parallelism of the axis of the earth, I demand, whether it be better to have the axis of the earth steady and perpetually parallel to itself, or to have it carelessly tumble this way and that way. Ray on the Creation.

PARALLELOGRAM. n. f. [παράλληλος and γραμμή; parallelogram, Fr.] In geometry, a right lined quadrilateral figure, whose opposite sides are parallel and equal. Harris.

The experiment we made in a loadstone of a parallelogram, or long figure, wherein only inverting the extremes, as it came out of the fire, we altered the poles. Brown.

We may have a clear idea of the area of a parallelogram, without knowing what relation it bears to the area of a triangle. Watts's Logic.

PARALLELOGRAMICAL. adj. [from parallelogram.] Having the properties of a parallelogram.

PARALLELOPIPED. n. f. [from parallelepiped, Fr.] A solid figure contained under six parallelograms, the opposites of which are equal and parallel; or it is a prism, whose base is a parallelogram: it is always triple to a pyramid of the same base and height. Harris.

Two prisms alike in shape I tied so, that their axes and opposite sides being parallel, they compos'd a parallelopipeid. Newton's Optics.

Crystals that hold lead are yellowish, and of a cubic or parallelopipeid figure. Woodward.

PARALOGISM. n. f. [παράλογισμος; paralogisme, Fr.] A false argument.

That because they have not a bladder of gall, like those we observe in others, they have no gall at all, is a paralogism not admissible, a fallacy that dwells not in a cloud, and needs not the sun to scatter it. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Modern writers, making the drachma less than the denarius, others equal, have been deceived by a double paralogism, in standing too nicely upon the bare words of the ancients, without examining the things. Arbutnot.

If a syllogism agree with the rules given for the construction of it, it is called a true argument: if it disagree with these rules, it is a paralogism, or false argument. Watts.

PARALOGY. n. f. False reasoning.

That Methuselah was the longest liver of all the posterity of Adam, we quietly believe; but that he must needs be so, is perhaps below paralogy to deny. Brown.

PARALYSIS. [παράλυσις; paralyse, Fr.] A palsy.

PARALYTICAL. adj. [from paralysis; paralytique, Fr.] Pal-

PARALYTICK. adj. fied; inclined to palsy.

Nought shall it profit, that the charming fair, Angelic, softest work of heav'n, draws near
 To the cold shaking paralytick hand, Senseless of beauty. Prirr.

If a nerve be cut, or straightly bound, that goes to any muscle, that muscle shall immediately lose its motion; which is the case of paralyticks. Derham.

PAR

PARAMETER. n. f. The latus rectum of a parabola, is a third proportional to the abscissa and any ordinate; so that the square of the ordinate is always equal to the rectangle under the parameter and abscissa: but, in the ellipse and hyperbola, it has a different proportion. Harris.

PARAMOUNT. adj. [par and mount.]
1. Superiour; having the highest jurisdiction; as lord paramount, the chief of the feignity.

Leagues within the state are ever pernicious to monarchies; for they raise an obligation, paramount to obligation of feoffment, and make the king, tanquam unus ex nobis. Bacon.
The dogmatist's opinioned assurance is paramount to argument. Clarville.

If all power be derived from Adam, by divine institution, this is a right antecedent and paramount to all government; and therefore the positive laws of men cannot determine that which is itself the foundation of all law. Locke.

Mankind, seeing the apostles possessed of a power plainly paramount to the powers of all the known beings, whether angels or demons, could not question their being inspired by God. West on the Resurrection.

2. Eminent; of the highest order.
John a Chamber was hanged upon a gibbet raised a stage higher in the midst of a square gallows, as a traitor paramount; and a number of his chief accomplices were hanged upon the lower story round him. Bacon.

PARAMOUNT. n. f. The chief.

In order came the grand infernal peers,

PARAMOUR. n. f. [par and amour, Fr.]

1. A lover or wooer.

Upon the floor
A lovely bevy of fair ladies sat,
Court'd of many a jolly paramour,
The which them did in modeltwise amate,
And each one fought his lady to aggrate. Fa. Queen.

No season then for her
To wanton with the fun her lusty paramour. Milt.

2. A mistress. It is obsolete in both senses, though not inellegant or unumfual.

Shall I believe
That unsubstantial death is amorous,
And that the lean abhorred monster keeps Thee here in dark to be his paramour. Shakespeare.

PARANOMPH. n. f. [παράνομος, paranomphos, Fr.]

1. A bridegroom; one who leads the bride to her marriage.

The Timinian bride
Had not so soon prefer'd
Thy paranomph, worthless to thee compar'd, Successor in thy bed. Milton's Agonistes.

2. One who countenances or supports another.

Sin hath got a paranomph and a solicitor, a warrant and an advocate. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

PARAPHRASE. n. f. [παράφρασις, paraphrasis, Fr.] A brazen table fixed to a pillar, on which laws and proclamations were anciently engraven: also a table set up publicly, containing an account of the rising and setting of the stars, eclipses of the sun and moon, the seasons of the year, &c. whence astrologers give this name to the tables, on which they draw figures according to their art. Philips.

Our forefathers, observing the course of the sun, and marking certain mutations to happen in his progress through the zodiac, set them down in their parapegma, or astronomical canons. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PARAPET. n. f. [parapet, Fr. parapeito, Italian.] A wall breast high.

There was a wall or parapet of teeth set in our mouth to restrain the petulance of our words. Ben Jonson.

PARAPHIMOSIS. n. f. [παράφωσις, paraphimosis, Fr.] A disease when the prepuce cannot be drawn over the glans.

PARAPHERNALIA. n. f. [Lat. paraphernalia, Fr.] Goods in the wife's disposal.

PARAPHRASE. n. f. [παράφρασις, paraphrase, Fr.] A loose interpretation; an explanation in many words.

All the laws of nations were but a paraphrase upon this fumbling rectitude of nature, that was ready to enlarge itself into suitable determinations, upon all emergent objects and occasions. South's Sermons.

In paraphrase, or translation with latitude, the author's words are not so strictly followed as his sense, and that too amplified, but not altered: such is Mr. Waller's translation of Virgil's fourth Æneid. Dryden.

TO PARAPHRASE. v. a. [paraphrase, Fr. παράφραζεω.] To interpret with laxity of expression; to translate loosely.

We are put to construe and paraphrase our own words, to free ourselves from the ignorance and malice of our adversaries. Stillington's Def. of Df. on Romish Idolatry.

What needs he paraphrase on what we mean, Dryden.

We were at worst but wanton; he's obscene.

Where translation is impracticable, they may paraphrase.

But it is intolerable, that under a pretence of paraphrasing and translating, a way should be suffered of treating authors to a manifest disadvantage. Pelton on the Classics.

PARAPHRASIS. n. f. [παράφρασις, Fr. παράφρασις.] A lax interpreter; one who explains in many words.

The fittest for publick audience are such, as following a middle course between the rigor of literal translators and the liberty of paraphrasis, do, with great shortness and plainness, deliver the meaning. Hooker.

The chaldean paraphrast renders Gerah by Meath. Arbuth.

PARAPHRASIS. n. f. [παράφρασις, Fr. παράφρασις.] Lax interpretation; one who explains in many words.

PAR

5. Any number or quantity in contempt.

They came to this conclusion; that, unless they could, by a parcel of fair words and pretences, engage them into a confederacy, there was no good to be done. L'Estrange.

TO PARCEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To divide into portions.

If they allot and parcel out several perfections to several deities, do they not, by this, assert contradictions, making deity only to such a measure perfect; whereas a deity implies perfection beyond all measure. South's Sermons.

Those ghostly kings would parcel out my pow'r,
And all the fatness of my land devour. Dryden.

2. To make up into a mass.

What a wounding shame,
That mine own servant should Parcel the sum of my disgraces by Addition of his envy! Shakespeare.

PARCENER. n. f. [In common law.] When one dies possessed of an estate, and having issue only daughters, or his sisters be his heirs; so that the lands descend to those daughters or sisters: these are called parceners, and are but as one heir. Dist.

PARCENERY. n. f. [from parcener, French.] A holding or occupancy of land by more persons pro indiviso, or by joint tenants, otherwise called coparceners: for if they refuse to divide their common inheritance, and chuse rather to hold it jointly, they are said to hold in parcenary. Convel.

TO PARCH. v. a. [from παρκαίνω, says Junius; from parco, says Skinner; neither of them seem satisfied with their conjecture: perhaps from parchus, burnt, to parch, to parch; perhaps from parchment, the effect of fire upon parchment being almost proverbial.] To burn slightly and superficially; to scorch; to dry up.

Math thy fiery heart to parch thine entrails,
That not a tear can fall. Shakespeare.

Did he so often lodge in open field
In winter's cold, and summer's parching heat,
To conquer France. Shakespeare, Henry IV.

Torrid heat,
And vapours as the Libyan air adust,
Began to parch that temperate clime. Milt. Par. Lost.

I'm stupidly d with sorrow, pall relief
Of tears; parch'd up and wither'd with my grief. Dryd.

Without this circular motion of our earth, one hemisphere would be condemned to perpetual cold and darkness, the other continually roasted and parched by the sun beams. Ray.

The Syrian star
With his sultry breath infects the sky;
The ground below is parch'd, the heav'ns above us fry. Dryden's Horace.

Full fifty years
I have endur'd the biting winter's blast,
And the fever heats of parching summer. Rouse.

He is like a man distressed with thirst in the parched places of the wilderness, he searches every pit, but finds no water. Rogers's Sermons.

TO PARCH. v. n. To be scorched.

We were better parch in Africk sun,
Than in the pride and salt scorn of his eyes. Shakespeare.

If to prevent the acrospiring, it be thrown thin

PAR

Those parts, formerly reckoned parenchymatous, are now found to be bundle of exceedingly small threads. Cheyne.
PARANESIS. n. f. [παράνεσις.] Persuasion. Diët.
PARENT. n. f. [parent, Fr. parens, Latin.] A father or mother.
 All true virtues are to honour true religion as their parent, and all well-ordered commonwealths to love her as their chiefest stay. Hooker.

As a publick parent of the state,
 My justice, and thy crime, requires thy fate.
 In vain on the dissembled mother's tongue
 Had cunning art, and thy persuasion hung;
 And real care in vain and native love
 In the true parent's panting breast had strove. Prior.
PARENTAGE. n. f. [parentage, Fr. from parent.] Extraction; birth; condition with respect to the rank of parents.
 A gentleman of noble parentage,
 Of fair demeanour, youthful and nobly allied. Shakespeare.
 Though men esteem thee low of parentage,
 Thy father is th' eternal king. Anti. Par. Reg.

To his levee go,
 And from himself your parentage may know. Dryden.
 We find him, not only boasting of his parentage, as an Israelite at large, but particularizing his descent from Benjamin. Atterbury's Sermons.
PARENTAL. adj. [from parent.] Becoming parents; pertaining to parents.
 It overthrows the careful course and parental provision of nature, whereby the young ones newly excluded, are sustained by the dam. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

These eggs hatched by the warmth of the sun into little worms, feed without any need of parental care. Derham.
 Young ladies, on whom parental controul sits heavily, give a man of intrigue room to think, that they want to be parents. Clarissa.
PARENTIFICATION. n. f. [from parents, Latin.] Something done or said in honour of the dead.
PARENTHESIS. n. f. [parenthesis, Fr. παράθεσις, and ἵσταται.] A sentence so included in another sentence, as that it may be taken out, without injuring the sense of that which incloses it; being commonly marked thus, ( ).

In vain is my person excepted by a parenthesis of words, when so many hands are armed against me with swords. King Charles.
 In his Indian relations, are contained strange and incredible accounts; he is seldom mentioned, without a derogatory parenthesis in any author. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 Thou shalt be seen,
 Tho' with some short parenthesis between,
 High on the throne of wit. Dryden.
 Don't suffer every occasional thought to carry you away into a long parenthesis, and thus stretch out your discourse, and divert you from the point in hand. Watts's Logick.

PARENTHETICAL. adj. [from parenthesis.] Pertaining to a parenthesis.
PAPER. n. f. [from pare.] An instrument to cut away the surface.
 A hone and a paper, like sole of a boot,
 To pare away grapple, and to raise up the root. Tusser.

PAPER. n. f. [παρά and ἔργον.] Something unimportant; something done by the by.
 The scripture being serious, and commonly omitting such paperies, it will be unreasonable to condemn all laughter. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PARGET. n. f. Plaster laid upon roofs of rooms.
 Gold was the parget, and the ceiling bright
 Did shine all fealy with great plates of gold;
 The floor with jasp and emerald was dight. Spenser.
 Of English talc, the coarser sort is called plaster or parget; the finer, spand. Woodward.

TO PARGET. v. a. [from the noun.] To plaster; to cover with plaster.
 There are not more arts of disguising our corporeal blemishes than our moral; and yet, whilst we thus paint and parget our own deformities, we cannot allow any the least imperfection of another's to remain undetected.

PARGETER. n. f. [from parget.] A plasterer.
PARABELLION. n. f. [παρά and ἔλιος.] A mock sun.
 To neglect that supreme refulgency, that shines in God, for those dim representations of it, that we so doat on in the creature, is as absurd, as it were for a Persian to offer his sacrifice to a parbellion, instead of adoring the sun. Boyle.

PARIETAL. adj. [from paries, Latin.] Constituting the sides or walls.
 The lower part of the parietal and upper part of the temporal bones were fractured. Sharp's Surgery.
PARIETARY. n. f. [parietarius, Fr. paries, Lat.] An herb. Alibi.
PARING. n. f. [from pare.] That which is pared off any thing; the rind.
 Virginity breeds mites, much like a cheese; and consumes itself to the very paring. Shakespeare.

PAR

To his guest, tho' no way sparing,
 He eat himself the rind and paring. Pope.
 In May, after rain, pare off the surface of the earth, and with the parings raise your hills high, and enlarge their breadth. Mortimer's Husbandry.

PARIS. n. f. An herb.
PARISH. n. f. [parochia, low Lat. parroisse, Fr. of the Greek παροικία, i. e. vicinorum conventus, acclatus, sacra vicinia.] The particular charge of a secular priest. Every church is either cathedral, conventual, or parochial: cathedral is that, where there is a bishop seated, so called a cathedra: conventual consists of regular clerks, professing some order of religion, or of a dean and chapter, or other college of spiritual men: parochial is that which is instituted for tending divine service, and administering the holy sacraments to the people, dwelling within a certain compass of ground near unto it. Our realm was first divided into parishes by Honorius, archbishop of Canterbury, in the year of our Lord 636.

Dametas came piping and dancing, the merriest man in a parish.
 The thythes, his parish freely paid, he took;
 But never ful'd, or curs'd with bell or book. Dryden.

PARISH. adj.
 1. Belonging to the parish; having the care of the parish.
 A parish priest was of the pilgrim train,
 An awful, reverend and religious man. Dryden.
 Not parish clerk, who calls the psalm so clear. Gay.
 The office of the church is performed by the parish priest, at the time of his interment. Ayliff.
 A man, after his natural death, was not capable of the least parish office. Albutnot and Pope's Mart. Scrib.

2. Maintained by the parish.
PARISHIONER. n. f. [parroisien, Fr. from parish.] One that belongs to the parish.
 I praise the Lord for you, and so may my parishioners; for their souls are well tutor'd by you.
 Hail bishop Valentine, whose day this is,
 All the air is thy diocese,
 And all birds are thy parishioners. Dome.

In the greater out-parishes, many of the parishioners, thro' neglect, do perish. Grant.
 I have deposited thirty marks, to be distributed among the poor parishioners. Addison's Spectator.

PARISHIONER. n. f. [for parishioner.] A beadle; a summoner of the courts of civil law.
 You shall be summon'd by a host of parishioners; you shall be sentenced in the spiritual court. Dryden.

PARITY. n. f. [paritas, Fr. paritas, Lat.] Equality; resemblance.
 We may here justly tax the dishonesty and shamefulness of the mouths, who have upbraided us with the opinion of a certain Stoical parity of sins. Hall.
 That Christ or his apostles ever commanded to set up such a parity of prebys, and in such a way as those Scots endeavoured, I think is not very disputable. K. Charles.

Survey the total set of animals, and we may, in their legs or organs of progression, observe an equality of length and parity of numeration; that is, not any to have an odd leg, or the movers of one side not exactly answered by the other. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Those accidental occurrences, which excited Socrates to the discovery of such an invention, might fall in with that man that is of a perfect parity with Socrates. Hale.
 Their agreement, in essential characters, makes rather an identity than a parity. Glavinille.
 Women could not live in that parity and equality of expense with their husbands, as now they do. Grant.

By an exact parity of reason, we may argue, if a man has no sense of those kindnesses that pass upon him, from one like himself, whom he fees and knows, how much less shall his heart be affected with the grateful sense of his favours, whom he converses with only by imperfect speculations, by the discourses of reason, or the discoveries of faith. South's Sermons.
 By parity of reason, we must expect a peace so much worse about two years hence. Swift's Miscellaneous.

PARK. n. f. [parcuus, Sax. pare, Fr.] A piece of ground inclosed and stored with wild beasts of chase, which a man may have by prescription or the king's grant. Manwood, in his forest-laws, defines it thus: a park is a place for privilege for wild beasts of venery, and also for other wild beasts, that are beasts of the forest and of the chase: and those wild beasts are to have a firm peace and protection there, so that no man may hunt or chase them within the park, without license of the owner: a park is of another nature, than either a chase or a warren; for a park must be inclosed, and may not lie open; if it does, it is a good cause of seizure into the king's hands: and the owner cannot have action against such as hunt in his park, if it lies open. Cowell.

We have parks and inclosures of all sorts of beasts and birds, which we use not only for view or rareness, but likewise for dissections and trials. Bacon.

TO PARK. v. a. [from the noun.] To inclose as in a park.
 How are we park'd, and bounded in a pale?
 A little herd of England's tim'rous deer,
 Maz'd with a yelping kennel of French curs. Shakespeare.

PARKER. n. f. [from park.] A park-keeper. Ansforth.
PARKLEAVES. n. f. An herb. Ansforth.
PARLE. n. f. [from parler, French.] Conversation; talk; oral treaty; oral discussion of any thing.

Of all the gentlemen,
 That every day with parle encounter me,
 In thy opinion, which is worthiest love. Shakespeare.
 Our trumpet call'd you to this general parle. Shakespeare.
 The bishop, by a parle, is, with a show
 Of combination, cunningly betray'd. Daniel.

Why meet we thus like wrangling advocates,
 To urge the justice of our cause with words?
 I hate this parle; 'tis tame: if we must meet,
 Give me my arms. Rome's Ambitious Step-mother.

TO PARLEY. v. n. [from parler, French.] To treat by word of mouth; to talk; to discuss any thing orally. It is much used in war, for a meeting of enemies to talk.
 A Turk desired the captain to send some, with whom they might more conveniently parley. Knutlet's Hist. of the Turks.
 He parleys with her a while, as imagining she would advise him to proceed. Broome.

PARLEY. n. f. [from the verb.] Oral treaty; talk; conference; discussion by word of mouth.
 Seek rather by parley, to recover them than by the sword. Sid.
 Well, by my will, we shall admit no parley:
 A rotten case abides no handlings. Shakespeare.
 In such a parley should I answer thee. Shakespeare.
 Summon a parley, we will talk with him. Shakespeare.
 Let us resolve never to have any parley with our lusts, but to make some considerable progress in our repentance. Calamy.
 No gentle means could be essay'd;
 'Twas beyond parley when the siege was laid. Dryden.
 Force, never yet a generous heart did gain;
 We yield on parley, but are storm'd in vain. Dryden.
 Yet when some better fate youth
 Shall with his am'rous parley move thee,
 Reflect one moment on his truth,
 Who dying thus, persists to love thee. Prior.

PARLIAMENT. n. f. [parliamentum, low Lat. parlement, Fr.] In England, is the assembly of the king and three estates of the realm; namely, the lords spiritual, the lords temporal, and commons, for the debating of matters touching the common wealth, especially the making and correcting of laws; which assembly or court is, of all others, the highest, and of greatest authority. Cowell.

The king is tied to London,
 To call a present court of parliament,
 Far be the thought of this from Henry's heart,
 To make a shambles of the parliament house. Shakespeare.
 The true use of parliaments is very excellent; and be often called, and continued as long as is necessary. Bacon.
 I thought the right way of parliaments, the most safe for my crown, as best pleasing to my people. King Charles.
 These are mob readers: if Virgil and Martial stood for parliament-men, we know who would carry it. Dryden.

PARLIAMENTARY. adj. [from parliament.] Enacted by parliament; relating to parliament; pertaining to parliament.
 To the three first titles of the two houses, or lines, and conquest, were added two more; the authorities parliamentary and papal. Bacon.
 Many things, that obtain as common law, had their original by parliamentary acts or constitutions, made in writings by the king, lords, and commons. Hale.
 Credit to run ten millions in debt, without parliamentary security; I think to be dangerous and illegal. Swift.

PARLOUR. n. f. [parlour, French; parlauris, Italian.]
 1. A room in monasteries, where the religious meet and converse.
 2. A room in houses on the first floor, elegantly furnished for reception or entertainment.
 Can we judge it a thing seemly, for a man to go about the building of an house to the God of heaven, with no other appearance than if his end were to rear up a kitchen or a parlour for his own use. Hooker.
 Back again fair Alma led them right,
 And soon into a goodly parlour brought. Fa. Queen.
 It would be infinitely more shameful, in the dress of the kitchen, to receive the entertainments of the parlour. South.
 Roof and sides were like a parlour made,
 A soft recess, and a cool summer shade. Dryden.
 A soft recess, and a cool summer shade. Dryden.
 This might seem to come from parler, Fr. to speak; but parlour derives it, I think, rightly, from parler, in which sense it answers to the Latin improbus. Keen; sprightly; waggish.
 Midas durst communicate
 To none but to his wife his ears of state;
 One must be trusted, and he thought her fit,
 As passing prudent, and a parlous wit. Dryden.
PARLOUSNESS. n. f. [from parlous.] Quickness; keenness of temper.

 Well, by my will, we shall admit no parley:
 A rotten case abides no handlings. Shakespeare.
 In such a parley should I answer thee. Shakespeare.
 Summon a parley, we will talk with him. Shakespeare.
 Let us resolve never to have any parley with our lusts, but to make some considerable progress in our repentance. Calamy.
 No gentle means could be essay'd;
 'Twas beyond parley when the siege was laid. Dryden.
 Force, never yet a generous heart did gain;
 We yield on parley, but are storm'd in vain. Dryden.
 Yet when some better fate youth
 Shall with his am'rous parley move thee,
 Reflect one moment on his truth,
 Who dying thus, persists to love thee. Prior.

PARLIAMENT. n. f. [parliamentum, low Lat. parlement, Fr.] In England, is the assembly of the king and three estates of the realm; namely, the lords spiritual, the lords temporal, and commons, for the debating of matters touching the common wealth, especially the making and correcting of laws; which assembly or court is, of all others, the highest, and of greatest authority. Cowell.

The king is tied to London,
 To call a present court of parliament,
 Far be the thought of this from Henry's heart,
 To make a shambles of the parliament house. Shakespeare.
 The true use of parliaments is very excellent; and be often called, and continued as long as is necessary. Bacon.
 I thought the right way of parliaments, the most safe for my crown, as best pleasing to my people. King Charles.
 These are mob readers: if Virgil and Martial stood for parliament-men, we know who would carry it. Dryden.

PARLIAMENTARY. adj. [from parliament.] Enacted by parliament; relating to parliament; pertaining to parliament.
 To the three first titles of the two houses, or lines, and conquest, were added two more; the authorities parliamentary and papal. Bacon.
 Many things, that obtain as common law, had their original by parliamentary acts or constitutions, made in writings by the king, lords, and commons. Hale.
 Credit to run ten millions in debt, without parliamentary security; I think to be dangerous and illegal. Swift.

PARLOUR. n. f. [parlour, French; parlauris, Italian.]
 1. A room in monasteries, where the religious meet and converse.
 2. A room in houses on the first floor, elegantly furnished for reception or entertainment.
 Can we judge it a thing seemly, for a man to go about the building of an house to the God of heaven, with no other appearance than if his end were to rear up a kitchen or a parlour for his own use. Hooker.
 Back again fair Alma led them right,
 And soon into a goodly parlour brought. Fa. Queen.
 It would be infinitely more shameful, in the dress of the kitchen, to receive the entertainments of the parlour. South.
 Roof and sides were like a parlour made,
 A soft recess, and a cool summer shade. Dryden.
 A soft recess, and a cool summer shade. Dryden.
 This might seem to come from parler, Fr. to speak; but parlour derives it, I think, rightly, from parler, in which sense it answers to the Latin improbus. Keen; sprightly; waggish.
 Midas durst communicate
 To none but to his wife his ears of state;
 One must be trusted, and he thought her fit,
 As passing prudent, and a parlous wit. Dryden.
PARLOUSNESS. n. f. [from parlous.] Quickness; keenness of temper.

PARLOUSNESS. n. f. [from parlous.] Quickness; keenness of temper.

Beasts and birds, having one common use of spittle, are furnished with the parotid glands, which help to supply the mouth with it. Grew.
PAROTIS. n. f. [παροτίς.] A tumour in the glandules behind and about the ears, generally called the emunctories of the brain; though, indeed, they are the external fountains of the saliva of the mouth. Wilson.

PAROXYSM. [παροξυσμός; paroxysme, Fr.] A fit; periodical exacerbation of a disease.
 I fancied to myself a kind of case, in the change of the paroxysm. Dryden.
 Amorous girls, through the fury of an hysterical paroxysm, are cast into a trance for an hour. Harvey.
 The greater distance of time there is between the paroxysms, the fever is less dangerous, but more obstinate. Arbutnot.

PARRICIDE. n. f. [parricide, Fr. parricida, Latin.]
 1. One who destroys his father.
 I told him the revenging gods
 'Gainst parricides did all the thunder bend, Spoke with how manifold and strong a bond
 The child was bound to th' father. Sh

PAR

- I could
By dint of logick strike thee mute;
With learned skill, now puff, now parry,
From Darii to Bocardo vary. Prig.
- To PARSE, v. a. [from pars, Latin.] To resolve a sentence into the elements or parts of speech. It is a word only used in grammar schools.
Let him construe the letter into English, and parse it over perfectly. Asham's Schoolmaster.
Let scholars reduce the words to their original, to the first case of nouns, or first tense of verbs, and give an account of their formations and changes, their syntax and dependencies, which is called parfing. Wait's Improv. of the Mind.
- PARSIMONIOUS, adj. [from parsimony.] Covetous; frugal; sparing. It is sometimes of a good, sometimes of a bad sense.
A prodigal king is nearer a tyrant, than a parsimonious; for store at home draweth not his contemplations abroad, but want supplieth itself of what is next. Bacon.
Extraordinary funds for one campaign may spare us the expense of many years, whereas a long parsimonious war will drain us of more men and money. Addison.
Parsimonious age and rigid wisdom. Rowe.
- PARSIMONIOUSLY, adv. [from parsimonious.] Covetously; frugally; sparingly.
Our ancestors acted parsimoniously, because they only spent their own treasure for the good of their posterity; whereas we squandered away the treasures of our posterity. Swift.
- PARSIMONIOUSNESS, n. f. [from parsimonious.] A disposition to spare and save.
PARSIMONY, n. f. [parfomia, Latin.] Frugality; covetousness; niggardliness; saving temper.
The ways to enrich, are many: parfimony is one of the best, and yet is not innocent; for it withholdeth men from works of liberality. Bacon.
These people, by their extreme parfimony, soon grow into wealth from the smallest beginnings. Swift.
- PARSLEY, n. f. [persil, Fr. apium, Lat. persil, Welsh.] The leaves are divided into wings, growing upon a branched rib, and for the most part cut into small segments: the petals of the flowers are whole and equal, each flower being succeeded by two gibbous channelled seeds. Miller.
A wench married in the afternoon, as she went to the garden for parsley to stuff a rabbit. Shakefp.
Green beds of parsley near the river grow. Dryden.
Sempronius dug Titus out of the parsley-bed, as they use to tell children, and thereby became his mother. Locke.
- PARSNER, n. f. [parfina, Latin.] A plant with rose and umbellated flowers, consisting of many petals or leaves placed orbicularly, and resting on the empalement, which turns to a fruit composed of two seeds, which are oval, and generally casting off their cover; to which you may add, that the leaves are winged and large. Miller.
November is drawn in a garment of changeable green, and black bunches of parfneps and turneps in his right hand. Peckham on Blazoning.
- PARSON, n. f. [Derived either from persona, because the parfon omnium personam in ecclesia fulminet; or from parochianus, the parish priest.]
1. The priest of a parish; one that has a parochial charge or cure of souls.
Abbot was preferred by king James to the bishoprick of Coventry and Litchfield, before he had been parfon, vicar or curate of any parish church. Clarendon.
  2. A clergyman.
Sometimes comes she with a tithe pig's tail,
Tickling the parfon as he lies a sleep;
Then dreams he of another benefice. Shakefp.
  3. It is applied to the teachers of the presbyterians.
PARSONAGE, n. f. [from parfon.] The benefice of a parish.
I have given him the parfage of the parish. Addison.
- PART, n. f. [pars, Latin.]
1. Something less than the whole; a portion; a quantity taken from a larger quantity.
Helen's cheeks, but not her heart,
Atalanta's better part. Shakefp.
The people stood at the nether part of the mount. Exodus xix. 17.
This law wanted not parts of prudent and deep foresight, for it took away occasion to pry into the kings title. Bacon.
The citizens were for the most part slain or taken. Knolles.
Henry had divided
The person of himself into four parts. Daniel.
These conclude that to happen often, which happeneth but sometimes, that never, which happeneth but seldom, and that always, which happeneth for the most part. Brown.
Besides his abilities as a soldier, which were eminent, he had very great parts of breeding, being a very great scholar in the political parts of learning. Clarendon.
When your judgement shall grow stronger, it will be necessary to examine, part by part, those works, which have given reputation to the masters. Dryden.

PAR

- Of heavenly part, and part of earthly blood;
A mortal woman mixing with a god. Dryden.
Our ideas of extension and number, do they not contain a secret relation of the parts? Locke.
2. Member.
He fully possessed the revelation he had received from God: all the parts were formed, in his mind, into one harmonious body. Locke.
  3. That which, in division, falls to each.
Go not without thy wife, but let me bear
My part of danger, with an equal share. Dryden.
Had I been won, I had deserv'd your blame,
But sure my part was nothing but the shame. Dryden.
  4. Share; concern.
Forasmuch as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also took part of the same. Hebrews ii. 14.
Sheba said, we have no part in David, neither have we inheritance in the son of Jesse. 2 Samuel xx. 1.
The ungodly made a covenant with death, because they are worthy to take part with it. Wisdom i. 16.
Agamemnon provokes Apollo, whom he was willing to appease afterwards at the cost of Achilles, who had no part in his fault. Pope.
  5. Side; party.
Michael Caffio,
When I have spoken of you dispraisingly,
Hath ta'en your part. Shakefp.
And that he might on many props repose,
He strengths his own, and who his part did take. Daniel.
Let not thy divine heart
Forethink me any ill,
Destiny may take thy part,
And may thy tears fulfill.
Some other pow'r
Might have aspir'd, and me tho' mean Drawn to his part. Milton.
Call up their eyes, and fix them on your example; that so natural ambition might take part with reason and their interest to encourage imitation. Clarendon.
A brand preserv'd to warm some prince's heart,
And make whole kingdoms take her brother's part. Waller.
The arm thus waits upon the heart,
So quick to take the bully's part;
That once, tho' warm, decides more flow,
Than t' other executes the blow. Prior.
  6. Something relating or belonging.
For Zelmane's part, she would have been glad of the fall, which made her bear the sweet burden of Philoclea, but that she feared the might receive some hurt. Sidney.
For my part, I would entertain the legend of my love, with quiet hours. Shakefp. Henry IV.
For your part, it does not appear to me,
That you should have an inch of any ground
To build a grief upon. Shakefp. Henry IV.
For my part, I have no fervile end in my labour, which may restrain or embale the freedom of my poor judgment. Watson.
For my part, I think there is nothing so secret, that shall not be brought to light, within the compass of the world. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
  7. Particular office or character.
The pneumatical part, which is in all tangible bodies, and hath some affinity with the air, performeth the parts of the air: as, when you knock upon an empty barrel, the sound is, in part, created by the air on the outside, and, in part, by the air in the inside. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Accuse not nature, she hath done her part;
Do thou but thine. Milt. Par. Lost.
  8. Character appropriated in a play.
That part
Was aptly fitted, and naturally performed. Shakefp.
Have you the lion's part written? give it me, for I am slow of study. Shakefp. All's Well.
God is the master of the scenes: we must not chafe which part we shall act; it concerns us only to be careful, that we do it well. Taylor's Holy Living.
  9. Business; duty.
Let them be so furnished and instructed for the military part, as they may defend themselves. Bacon.
  10. Action; conduct.
Find him, my lord,
And chide him hither straight; this part of his Conjoins with my dislike. Shakefp.
  11. Relation reciprocal.
Inquire not whether the sacraments confer grace by their own excellency, because they, who affirm they do, require so much duty on our parts, as they also do, who attribute the effect to our moral disposition. Taylor.
The scripture tells us the terms of this covenant on God's part and ours; namely, that he will be our God, and we shall be his people. Tillotson's Sermons.

PAR

- It might be deem'd, on our historian's part,
Or too much negligence, or want of art,
If he forgot the vast magnificence
Of royal Thebes. Dryden.
12. In good part; in ill part; as well done; as ill done.
God accepteth it in good part, at the hands of faithful men. Hooker.
  13. [In the plural.] Qualities; powers; faculties; or accomplishments.
Who is courteous, noble, liberal, but he that hath the example before his eyes of Amphialus; where are all heretical parts, but in Amphialus? Sidney.
Such licentious parts tend, for the most part, to the hurt of the English, or maintenance of their own lewd liberty. Spenser on Ireland.
I conjure thee, by all the parts of man, Whom honour does acknowledge. Shakefp.
Solomon was a prince adorned with such parts of mind, and exalted by such a concurrence of all prosperous events to make him magnificent. Saunders's Sermons.
The Indian princes discover fine parts and excellent endowments, without improvement. Felton on the Glassick.
  14. [In the plural.] Quarters; regions; districts.
Although no man was, in our parts, spoken of, but he, for his manhood; yet, as though therein he excelled himself, he was called the courteous Amphialus. Sidney.
When he had gone over those parts, he came into Greece. Ad. xx. 2.
All parts resound with tumults, plaints, and fears,
And griefs death, in sundry shapes, appears. Dryden.
- PART, adv. Partly; in some measure.
For the fair kindness you have shew'd me,
And part being prompted, by your present trouble, I'll lend you something. Shakefp. Twelfth Night.
- TO PART, v. a.
1. To divide; to share; to distribute.
All that believed, fold their goods, and parted them to all men, as every man had need. Acts ii. 45.
Jove himself no less content wou'd be
To part his throne, and share his heav'n with thee. Pope.
  2. To separate; to disunite.
A chariot of fire parted them both asunder, and Elijah went up into heaven. 2 Kings ii. 11.
Nought but death shall part thee and me. Ruth i. 17.
All the world,
As 'twere the bus'ness of mankind to part us,
Is arm'd against my love. Dryden.
  3. To break into pieces.
Part it in pieces, and pour oil thereon. Leviticus ii. 6.
  4. To keep asunder.
The French and English, there miscarried
A vessel of our country. Shakefp.
  5. To separate combatants.
Who said
King John did fly, an hour or two before
The stumbling night did part our weary powers. Shakefp.
Jove did both hosts survey,
And, when he pleas'd to thunder, part the fray. Waller.
  6. To discern.
The liver minds his own affair,
And parts and strains the vital juices. Prior.
- TO PART, v. n.
1. To be separated.
Powerful hands will not part Easily from possession won with arms. Milt. Par. Reg.
'Twas for him much easier to subdue
Those foes he fought with, than to part from you. Dryd.
  2. To quit each other.
He wrung Bassanio's hand, and so they parted. Shakefp.
This was the design of a people, that were at liberty to part asunder, but desir'd to keep in one body. Locke.
What! part, for ever part? unkind I mean;
Oh! can you think, that death is half so dreadful,
As it would be to live without thee. Smith.
If it pleases God to restore me to my health, I shall make a third journey; if not, we must part, as all human creatures have parted. Swift.
  3. To take farewell.
Ere I could Give him that parting kiss, which I had set Betwixt two charming words, comes in my father. Shakefp.
Nuptial bow'r! by me adorn'd, from thee
How shall I part, and whither wander. Milton.
Upon his removal, they parted from him with tears in their eyes. Swift.
  4. To have share.
As his part is, that goeth down to the battle, so shall his part be, that tarrieth by the stuff; they shall part alike. Job xxx. 24.
  5. [Partir, Fr.] To go away; to set out.

PAR

- So parted they; the angel up to heaven
From the thick shade, and Adam to his bow'r. Milton.
Thy father
Embrace'd me, parting for the Etrurian land. Dryden.
6. To PART with. To quit; to resign; to lose; to be separated from.
For her sake, I do rear up her boy;
And for her sake, I will not part with him. Shakefp.
An affectionate wife, when in fear of parting with her beloved husband, heartily desir'd of God his life or society; upon any conditions that were not sinful. Taylor.
Celia, for thy sake, I part
With all that grew so near my heart;
And that I may successful prove,
Transform myself to what you love. Waller.
Thou marble hew'n, ere long to part with breath,
And houses rear'd, unmindful of thy death. Sandys.
Lixivate salts, though, by piercing the bodies of vegetables, they dispose them to part readily with their tincture; yet some tinctures they do not only draw out, but likewise alter. Boyle.
The ideas of hunger and warmth are some of the first that children have, and which they scarce ever part with. Locke.
What a despicable figure must mock-patriots make, who venture to be hang'd for the ruin of those civil rights, which their ancestors, rather than part with, chose to be cut to pieces in the field of battle? Addison's Freetholder.
The good things of this world so delight us, as remember, that we are to part with them, to exchange them for more durable enjoyments. Atterbury's Sermons.
As for riches and power, our Saviour plainly determines, that the best way to make them blessings, is to part with them. Swift's Miscellanies.
- PARTABLE, adj. [from part.] Divisible; such as may be parted.
His hot love was partable among three other of his mistresses. Camden's Remains.
- PARTAGE, n. f. [partage, Fr.] Division; act of sharing or parting. A word merely French.
Men have agreed to a disproportionate and unequal possession of the earth, having found out a way, how a man may fairly possess more land, than he himself can use the product of, by receiving, in exchange, for the overplus, gold and silver: this partage of things, in an equality of private possessions, men have made practicable out of the bounds of society, without compact, only by putting a value on gold and silver, and tacitly agreeing in the use of money. Locke.
- TO PARTAKE, v. n. Preterite, I partook: participle passive, partaken. [part and take.]
1. To have share of any thing; to take share with.
Partake and use my kingdom as your own,
And shall be yours while I command the crown. Dryden.
How far brutes partake in this faculty, is not easy to determine. Locke.
  2. To participate; to have something of the property, nature, claim, or right.
The attorney of the duchy of Lancaster partakes partly of a judge, and partly of an attorney-general. Bacon.
  3. To be admitted to; not to be excluded.
You may partake of any thing we say;
We speak no treason. Shakefp. Rich. III.
  4. Sometimes with in before the thing partaken of.
I took occasion to conjecture, how far brutes partook with men, in any of the intellectual faculties. Locke.
Truth and falsehood have no other trial, but reason and proof, which they made use of to make themselves knowing, and so must others too, that will partake in their knowledge. Locke.
  5. To combine; to enter into some design. An unusual sense.
As it prevents factions and partakings, so it keeps the rule and administration of the laws uniform. Hobbs.
- TO PARTAKE, v. a.

that, for the most part, faces the south and best front of an house, and is generally furnished with greens, flowers, &c.
Miller.

There are as many kinds of gardening, as of poetry; your makers of partes and flower gardens are epigramatists and sonneteers. Spettator, N<sup>o</sup> 477.

The vast partes a thousand hands shall make;
Lo! Cobham comes, and floats them with a lake. Pope.

PA'RTIAL. adj. [partial, French.]
1. Inclined antecedently to favour one party in a cause, or one side of the question more than the other.
Ye have not kept my ways, but have been partial in the law. Mal. ii. 9.

2. Inclined to favour without reason.
Self-love will make men partial to themselves and friends, and ill nature, passion, and revenge will carry them too far in punishing others; and hence, God hath appointed governments to restrain the partiality and violence of men. Locke.

Authors are partial to their wit, 'tis true,
But are not critics to their judgment too. Pope.
In these, one may be finer to a reasonable friend, than to a fond and partial parent. Pope.

3. Affecting only one part; subsisting only in a part; not general; not universal; not total.
If we compare these partial dissolutions of the earth with an universal dissolution, we may as easily conceive an universal deluge from an universal dissolution, as a partial deluge from a partial. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

That which weakens religion, will at length destroy it; for the weakening of a thing is only a partial destruction of
it. South's Sermons.

All discord, harmony, not underfoot;
All partial evil, universal good. Pope.

PARTIALITY. n. f. [partialité, Fr. from partial.] Unequal state of the judgment and favour of one above the other, without just reason.
Then would the Irish party cry out partiality, and complain he is not used as a subject, he is not suffered to have the free benefit of the law. Spenser on Ireland.

Partiality is properly the understanding's judging according to the inclination of the will and affections, and not according to the exact truth of things, or the merits of the cause. South.

As there is a partiality to opinions, which is apt to mislead the understanding; so there is also a partiality to studies, which is prejudicial to knowledge. Locke.

TO PARTIALIZE. v. a. [partialiser, Fr. from partial.] To make partial. A word, perhaps, peculiar to Shakespeare, and not unworthy of general use.
Such neighbour-neariness to our sacred blood
Should nothing privilege him, nor partialize
Th' unfooping firmness of my upright soul. Shakefp.

PA'RTIALLY. adv. [from partial.]
1. With unjust favour or dislike.
2. In part; not totally.
That stole into a total verity, which was but partially true in its covert sense. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The message he brought, opened a clear prospect of eternal salvation, which had been but obscurely and partially figured in the shadows of the law. Rogers's Sermons.

PARTIBILITY. n. f. [from partible.] Divisibility; separabi-lity.

PARTIBLE. adj. [from part.] Divisible; separable.
Make the moulds partible, glued or cemented together, that you may open them, when you take out the fruit. Bacon.

The same body, in one circumstance, is more weighty, and, in another, is more partible. Digby on the Soul.

PARTICIPABLE. adj. [from participate.] Such as may be shared or partaken.

PAR

Plato, by his ideas, means only the divine essence with this connotation, as it is variously imitable or participable by created beings. Norris's Miscellaneous.

PARTICIPANT. adj. [participant, Fr. from participate.] Shareing; having share or part.
During the parliament, he published his proclamation, offering pardon to all such as had taken arms, or been participant of any attempts against him; so as they submitted themselves. Bacon.

The prince saw he should confer with one participate of more than monkish speculations. Watson.

If any part of my body be so mortified, as it becomes like a rotten branch of a tree, it putrefies, and is not participate of influence derived from my soul, because it is now no longer in it to quicken it. Hale.

TO PARTICIPATE. v. n. [participo, Lat. participo, Fr.]
1. To partake; to have share.
Th' other instruments
Did see, and hear, devise, instruct, walk, feel;
And mutually participate. Shakefp.

2. With of.
An aged citizen brought forth all his provisions, and said, that as he did communicate unto them his store, so would he participate of their wants. Hayward.

3. With in.
His delivery, and thy joy thereon,
In both which we, as next, participate. Milton.

4. To have part of more things than one.
Few creatures participate of the nature of plants and metals both. Bacon.

God, when heav'n and earth he did create,
Form'd man, who should of both participate. Dowham.

Those bodies, which are under a light, which is extended and distributed equally through all, should participate of each others colours. Dryden.

5. To have part of something common with another.
The species of audibles seem to participate more with local motion, like percussions made upon the air. Bacon.

TO PARTICIPATE. v. a. To partake; to receive part of; to share.
As Christ's incarnation and passion can be available to no man's good, which is not made partaker of Christ, neither can we participate him without his presence. Hooker.

The French seldom achieved any honourable acts without Scottish hands, who therefore are to participate the glory with them. Camden's Remains.

Fellowship,
Such as I seek, fit to participate
All rational delights; wherein the brute Cannot be human comfort. Milt. Par. Lst.

PARTICIPATION. n. f. [participation, Fr. from participate.]
1. The state of sharing something in common.
Civil society doth more content the nature of man, than any private kind of solitary living; because, in society, this good of mutual participation is so much larger. Hooker.

Their spirits are so married in conjunction, with the participation of society, that they flock together in consent, like so many wild geese. Shakefp. Henry IV.

A joint coronation of himself and his queen might give any countenance of participation of title. Bacon.

2. The act or state of partaking or having part of something.
All things seek the highest, and covet more or less the participation of God himself. Hooker.

Those deities are so by participation, and subordinate to the supreme.
What an honour, that God should admit us into such a blessed participation of himself? Atterbury.

Convince them, that brutes have the least participation of thought, and they retract. Bentley's Sermons.

Your genius should mount above that mist, in which its participation and neighbourhood with earth long involved it. Pope.

3. Distribution; division into shares.
It sufficeth not, that the country hath wherewith to sustain even more than to live upon it, if means be wanting whereby to drive convenient participation of the general store into a great number of well-deservers. Raleigh.

PARTICIPIAL. adj. [participialis, Lat.] Having the nature of a participate.

PARTICIPIALLY. adv. [from participate.] In the sense or manner of a participate.

PARTICIPLE. n. f. [participium, Lat.]
1. A word partaking at once the qualities of a noun and verb.
A participle as is a particular sort of adjective, formed from a verb, and together with its signification of action, passion, or some other manner of existence, signifying the time thereof. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

2. Any thing that participates of different things.
The participles or confiners between plants and living creatures, are such as are fixed, though they have a motion in their parts: such as, cyfers and cockles. Bacon.

PARTICLE. n. f. [particula, Fr. particula, Lat.]
1. Any small portion of a greater substance. There

PAR

From any of the other unreasonable demands, the houses had not given their commissioners authority in the least particle to recede. Clarendon.

There is not one grain in the universe, either too much or too little, nothing to be added, nothing to be spared; nor so much as any one particle of it, that mankind may not be either the better or the worse for, according as 'tis applied. L'Estr.

With particles of heavy nily fire,
The God of nature did his soul inspire. Dryden.

Curious wits,
With rapture, with astonishment reflect,
On the small size of atoms, which unite
To make the smallest particle of light. Blackmore.

It is not impossible, but that microscopes may, at length, be improved to the discovery of the particles of bodies, on which their colours depend. Newton's Opticks.

Blest with more particles of heav'nly flame. Graville.

2. A word varied by inflexion.
Till Arianism had made it a matter of great sharpness and subtlety of wit to be a sound believing christian, men were not curious what syllables or particles of speech they used.
Hooker, b. v.

The Latin varies the signification of verbs and nouns, not as the modern languages, by particles prefixed, but by changing the last syllables. Locke on Education.

Particles are the words, whereby the mind signifies what connection it gives to the several affirmations and negations, that it unites in one continued reasoning or narration. Locke.

In the Hebrew tongue, there is a particle, confining but of one single letter, of which there are reckoned up above fifty several significations. Locke.

PARTICULAR. adj. [particularis, French.]
1. Relating to single persons; not general.
He, as well with general orations, as particular dealing with men of most credit, made them see how necessary it was. Sidney.

As well for particular application to special occasions, as also in other manifold respects, infinite treasures of wisdom are abundantly to be found in the holy scripture. Hooker.

2. Individual; one distinct from others.
Wherefore one plant draweth such a particular juice out of the earth, as it qualifyeth the earth, so as that juice, which remaineth, is fit for the other plant; there the neighbourhood doth good. Bacon.

This is true of actions considered in their general nature or kind; but not considered in their particular individual instances. South's Sermons.

Artists, who propose only the imitation of such a particular person, without election of ideas, have often been reproached for that omission. Dryden.

3. Noting properties or things peculiar.
Of this prince there is little particular memory; only that he was very studious and learned. Bacon.

4. Attentive to things single and distinct.
I have been particular in examining the reason of children's inheriting the property of their fathers, because it will give us farther light in the inheritance of power. Locke.

5. Single; not general.
Rather performing his general commandment, which had ever been, to embrace virtue, than any new particular, sprung out of passion, and contrary to the former. Sidney.

6. Odd; having something that eminently distinguishes him from others. This is commonly used in a sense of contempt.

PARTICULAR. n. f.
1. A single instance; a single point.
I must reserve some particulars, which it is not lawful for me to reveal. Bacon.

Those notions are universal, and what is universal must needs proceed from some universal constant principle; the same in all particulars, which can be nothing else but human nature. South's Sermons.

Having the idea of an elephant or an angle in my mind, the first and natural enquiry is, whether such a thing does exist? and this knowledge is only of particulars. Locke.

And if we will take them, as they were directed, in particular to her, or in her, as their representative, to all other women, they will, at most, concern the female sex only, and import no more but that subjection, they should ordinarily be in, to their husbands. Locke.

The master could hardly fit on his horse for laughing, all the while he was giving me the particulars of this story. Addif.

Vespasian he resembled in many particulars. Swift.

2. Individual; private person.
It is the greatest interest of particulars, to advance the good of the community. L'Estrange.

3. Private interest.
Our wisdom must be such, as doth not propose to itself to draw out our particular, the partial and immoderate desire whereof poisoneth wherefore it taketh place; but the scope and mark, which we are to aim at, is the publick and common good. Hooker.

They apply their minds even with hearty affection and zeal, at the least, unto those branches of publick prayer, wherein their own particular is moved. Hooker, b. 5.

His general lov'd him Shakefp.

In a most dear particular. Shakefp.

4. Private character; single self; state of an individual.
For his particular, I'll receive him gladly;
But not one follower. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

5. A minute detail of things singly enumerated.
The reader has a particular of the books, wherein this law was written. Ayliffe's Parergon.

6. Distinct not general recital.
Invention is called a muse, authors ascribe to each of them, in particular, the sciences which they have invented. Dryden.

PARTICULARITY. n. f. [particularité, Fr. from particular.]
1. Distinct notice or enumeration; not general assertion.
So did the boldness of their affirmation accompany the greatness of what they did affirm, even descending to particularities, what kingdoms he should overcome. Sidney.

2. Singleness; individuality.
Knowledge imprinted in the minds of all men, whereby both general principles for directing of human actions are com-prehended, and conclusions derived from them, upon which conclusions groweth, in particularity, the choice of good and evil. Hooker, b. ii.

3. Petty account; private incident.
To see the rules that were most agreeable to such an emperor, the flatteries that he lay m-it open to, with the like particularities only to be met with on medals, are certainly not a little pleasing. Addifon.

4. Something belonging to single persons.
Let the general trumpet blow his blast,
Particularities and petty founds
To cease. Shakefp. Henry VI.

5. Something peculiar.
I saw an old heathen altar, with this particularity, that it was hollowed like a dish at one end; but not the end on which the sacrifice was laid. Addifon's Remarks on Italy.

He applied himself to the coquette's heart; there occurred many particularities in this dissection. Addifon.

TO PARTICULARIZE. v. a. [particulariser, Fr. from particular.] To mention distinctly; to detail; to shew minutely.
The leanness that afflicts us, is an inventory to particularize their abundance. Shakefp. Coriolanus.

He not only boasts of his parentage as an Israelite, but par-ticularizes his descent from Benjamin. Atterbury's Sermons.

PARTICULARLY. v. a. [from particular.]
1. Distinctly; singly; not universally.
Providence, that universally casts its eye over all the creation, is yet pleased more particularly to fasten it upon some.
South's Sermons.

2. In an extraordinary degree.
This exact propriety of Virgil; I particularly regarded as a great part of his character. Dryden.

With the flower and the leaf I was so particularly pleased, both for the invention and the moral, that I commend it to the reader. Dryden.

TO PARTICULATE. v. a. [from particular.] To make mention singly. Obsolete.
I may not particulate of Alexander Hales, the irrefra-gable doctor. Camden's Remains.

PARTISAN. n. f. [partisan, French.]
1. A kind of pike or halberd.
Let us
Find out the prettiest dazied plot we can;
And make him with our pikes and partisans

Shall I strike at it with my partisan. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

2. [From parti, French.] An adherent to a faction.
Some of these partisans concluded, the government had hired men to be bound and pinioned. Addifon.

I would be glad any partisan would help me to a tolerable reason, that, because Clodius and Curio agree with me in a few singular notions, I must blindly follow them in all. Swift.

3. The commander of a party.
4. A commander's leading staff. Ainsworth.

PARTITION. n. f. [partition, Fr. partitio, Latin.]
1. The act of dividing; a state of being divided.
Like to a double cherry, seeming parted,
But yet an union in partition. Shakefp.

2. Division; separation; distinction.
We have, in this respect, our churches divided by certain partition, although not so many in number as theirs. Hooker.

Can we not
Partition make with spectacles so precious Twixt fair and foul? Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

We shall be winnow'd with so rough a wind,
That ev'n our corn shall seem as light as chaff,
And good from bad find no partition. Shakefp.

The day, month and year, measured by them, are used as standard measures, as likely others arbitrarily deduced from them by partition or collection. Heller on Time.

3. Part

PAR

3. Part divided from the rest; separate part.
Lodge'd in a small partition; and the rest
Ordain'd for uses to his Lord best known. Milton.
4. That by which different parts are separated.
It doth not follow, that God, without respect, doth teach us to erect between us and them a partition wall of difference, in such things indifferent as have hitherto been disputed of.
Hooker, b. iv. f. 6.
Make partitions of wood in a hoghead, with holes in them, and mark the difference of their sound from that of an hoghead without such partitions. Bacon.
Partition firm and sure,
The waters underneath from those above Dividing. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Enclosures our factions have made in the church, become a great partition wall to keep others out of it.
Decay of Piety.
At one end of it, is a great partition, designed for an opera. Addison.
The partition between good and evil is broken down; and where one sin has entered, legions will force their way.
Rogers's Sermons.
5. Part where separation is made.
The mound was newly made, no sight could pass
Betwixt the nice partitions of the grass,
The well-united feds so closely lay. Dryden.
To PARTITION, v. a. To divide into distinct parts.
These fides are uniform without, though severally partitioned within. Bacon.
PARTLET, n. f. A name given to a hen; the original signification being a ruff or band, or covering for the neck.
Hammer.
Thou dotard, thou art woman tir'd; unroofed
By thy dame partlet here. Shakespeare.
Tir'd with pinn'd ruffs, and fans, and partlet strips. Hall.
Dame partlet was the sovereign of his heart;
He feather'd her. Dryden's Fables.
PARTLY, adv. [from part.] In some measure; in some degree; in part.
That part, which, since the coming of Christ, partly hath embraced, and partly shall hereafter embrace the christian religion, we term, as by a more proper name, the church of Christ. Hooker, b. iii. f. 1.
The inhabitants of Naples have been always very notorious for leading a life of laziness and pleasure, which I take to arise out of the wonderful plenty of their country, that does not make labour so necessary to them, and partly out of the temper of their climate, that relaxes the fibres of their bodies, and disposes the people to such an idle indolent humour. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
PARTNER, n. f. [from part.]
1. Partaker; sharer; one who has part in any thing; associate.
My noble partner,
You greet with present grace,
That he seems rapt withal. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
Noble partners
Touch you the lowest points with sweetest terms. Shakespeare.
Those of the race of Sem were no partners in the unbelieving work of the tower. Raleigh's History.
To undergo Myself the total crime; or to accuse
My other self, the partner of my life. Milton.
Sapor, king of Persia, had an heaven of glass, which, proudly sitting in his estate, he trod upon, calling himself brother to the sun and moon, and partner with the stars.
Peacocks of Geometry.
The soul continues in her action, till her partner is again qualified to bear her company. Addison.
2. One who dances with another.
Lead in your ladies every one; sweet partner,
I must not yet forsake you. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
To PARTNER, v. a. [from the noun.] To join; to associate with a partner.
A lady who
So fair, and fatten'd to an empery,
Would make the great king double: to be partner'd
With tomboys, hir'd with self-exhibition,
Which your own coffers yield. Shakespeare.
PARTNERSHIP, n. f. [from partner.]
1. Joint interest or property.
He does possession keep,
And is too wife to hazard partnership. Dryden.
2. The union of two or more in the same trade.
'Tis a necessary rule in alliances, partnerships and all manner of civil dealings, to have a strict regard to the disposition of those we have to do withal. L'Estrange.
PARTOOK, v. p. Preterite of partake.
PARTTRIDGE, n. f. [from partis, Fr. pertris, Welsh; perdis, Lat.]
A bird of game.
The king is come out to seek a flea, as when one doth hunt a partridge in the mountains. 1 Sam. xxvi. 20.

PAR

- PARTURIENT, adj.* [from parturiens, Lat.] About to bring forth.
PARTURITION, n. f. [from parturio, Latin.] The state of being about to bring forth.
Conformation of parts is required, not only unto the previous conditions of birth, but also unto the parturition or very birth. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PARTY, n. f. [from partis, French.]
1. A number of persons confederated by similarity of designs or opinions in opposition to others; a faction.
When any of these combatants strips his terms of ambiguity, I shall think him a champion for truth, and not the slave of vain glory or a party. Locke.
This account of party patches will appear improbable to those, who live at a distance from the fashionable world. Addi.
Party writers are so sensible of the secret virtue of an innuendo, that they never mention the q—n at length. Spektat.
This party rage in women only serves to aggravate animosities that reign among them. Addison's Spectator, No 81.
As he never leads the conversation into the violence and rage of party disputes, I listened to him with pleasure. Tatler.
Division between those of the same party, exposes them to their enemies. Pope.
The most violent party men are such, as, in the conduct of their lives, have discovered least sense of religion or morality. Swift.
2. One of two litigants.
When you are hearing a matter between party and party, if pinched with the cholic, you make faces like mummies, and dismiss the controversy more entangled by your hearing;
all the peace you make in their cause, is calling both parties knaves. Shakespeare.
The cause of both parties shall come before the judges.
Exodus xlii. 9.
If a bishop be a party to a suit, and excommunicates his adversary; such excommunication shall not bar his adversary from his action. Ayliffe's Parergon.
3. One concerned in any affair.
The child was prisoner to the womb, and is Free'd and enfranchis'd; not a party to The anger of the king, nor guilty of The trespass of the queen. Shakespeare.
I do suspect this trash
To be a party in this injury. Shakespeare.
4. Side; persons engaged against each other.
Our Foes compell'd by need, have peace embrace'd:
The peace, both parties want, is like to last. Dryden.
5. Cause; side.
Agle came in, to make their party good. Dryden.
6. A sect assembly.
Let me extol a cat, on oysters fed,
I'll have a party at the Bedford-head. Pope.
If the clergy would a little study the arts of conversation, they might be welcome at every party, where there was the least regard for politeness or good sense. Swift.
7. Particular person; a person distinct from, or opposed to, another.
As the paced on, she was stopp'd with a number of trees, so thickly placed together, that she was afraid she should,
with rushing through, stop the speech of the lamentable party, which she was so desirous to understand. Sidney.
The minister of justice may, for publick example, virtuously will the execution of that party, whose pardon another, for confanguinity's sake, as virtuously may desire. Hooker.
If the jury found, that the party slain was of English race, it had been adjudged felony. Davies on Ireland.
How shall this be compass'd? canst thou bring me to the party? Shakespeare's Tempest.
The smoke received into the nostrils, causes the party to lie as if he were drunk. Abbot's Description of the World.
The imagination of the party to be cured, is not needful to concur; for it may be done without the knowledge of the party wounded. Bacon's Natural History.
He that confesses his sin, and prays for pardon, hath punished his fault; and then there is nothing left to be done by the offended party, but to return to charity. Taylor.
Though there is a real difference between one man and another, yet the party, who has the advantage, usually magnifies the inequality. Collier on Pride.
8. A detachment of soldiers: as, he commanded that party sent thither.
PARTY-COLOURED, adj. [from party and coloured.] Having diversity of colours.
The fulsome ewes,
Then conceiving, did, in yeanning time,
Fall party-colour'd lambs. Shakespeare. Merch. of Venice.
The leopard was valuing himself upon the lustre of his party-coloured skin. L'Estrange.
From one father both,
Both girl with gold, and clad in party-colour'd cloth. Dryden.
Constrain'd him in a bird, and made him fly
With party-colour'd plumes a chattering pie. Dryden.
I looked

PAS

- I looked with as much pleasure upon the little party-coloured assembly, as upon a bed of tulips. Addison's Spectator.
Nor is it hard to beautify each month
With files of party-colour'd fruits. Phillips.
Four knives in garb succinct, a trusty band,
And party-coloured troops, a shining train,
Draw forth to combat on the velvet plain. Pope.
PARTY-JURY, n. f. [in law.] A jury in some trials half foreigners and half natives.
PARTY-MAN, n. f. [from party and man.] A factious person; an abettor of a party.
PARTY-WALL, n. f. [from party and wall.] Wall that separates one house from the next.
'Tis an ill custom among bricklayers to work up a whole story of the party-walls, before they work up the fronts.
PARTY-VAL, n. f. [Fr.] A church or church porch: applied to the meetings or law-disputes among young students in the inns of courts, and also to that disputation at Oxford, called disputa- tio in parvis. Bailey.
PARTVITUNE, n. f. [from parvus, Latin.] Littlefness; minuteness.
The little ones of parvitude cannot reach to the same floor with them. Glansville.
PARTVITY, n. f. [from parvus, Lat.] Littlefness; minute-ness.
What are these for fineness and parvity, to those minute animalcula discovered in pepper-water. Roy.
PAS, n. f. [French.] Precedence; right of going foremost.
In her poor circumstances, she still preserv'd the mien of a gentlewoman; when she came into any full assembly, she would not yield the pas to the best of them. Arbutnot.
PASCHAL, adj. [from pascha, French; paschalis, Latin.]
1. Relating to the paslover.
2. Relating to Easter.
PASH, n. f. [from pash, Spanish.] A kiss. Hammer.
Thou want'st a rough pash, and the shoots that I have,
To be full like me. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.
To PASH, v. a. [from pash, Dutch.] To strike; to crush.
With my armed fist
I'll pash him o'er the face. Shakespeare.
Thy cunning engines have with labour rais'd
My heavy anger, like a mighty weight,
To fall and pash thee dead. Dryden.
PASQUE-FLOWER, n. f. [from pasquille, Latin.]
The flower consists of several leaves, which are placed in a circular order, and expand in form of a rose; out of the middle of which rises a pointal, belet, for the most part, with chives, which afterward becomes a fruit, in which the seeds are gathered, as it were in a little head, each ending in a small hair: to which must be added some little leaves, encompassing the pedicle below the flower; as the anemone, from which the pasque-flower differs in the seed, ending in a tail. Müller.
PASQUIL, n. f. [from pasquino, a statue at Rome, to PASQUIN, which they amuse any lampoon or paper of PASQUINADE, satirical observation.] A lampoon.
He never valued any pasquils that were dropped up and down, to think them worthy of his revenge. Howell.
The pasquils, lampoons, and libels, we meet with now-a-days, are a sort of playing with the four and twenty letters, without sense, truth, or wit. Tatler, No 92.
To PASS, v. n. [from passer, French; passus, a step, Latin.]
1. To go; to move from one place to another; to be progressive.
Tell him his long trouble is passing. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.
Out of this world. Genesis.
If I have found favour in thy sight, pass not away from thy servant. Genesis.
While my glory passeth by, I will put thee in a cleft of the rock, and will cover thee, while I pass by. Exodus xxxiii. 22.
Thus will I cut off him that passeth out, and him that returneth. Ezekiel xxxv. 7.
They took the fords of Jordan, and suffered not a man to pass over. Judges iii. 28.
This heap and this pillar be witness, that I will not pass over to thee, and that thou shalt not pass over it and this pillar unto me for harm. Genesis xxxi. 52.
An idea of motion not passing on, is not better than idea of motion at rest. Locke.
Heedless of those cares, with anguish stung,
He felt their stings as they pass'd along. Pope.
If the cause be visible, we stop at the instrument, and fel-dom pass on to him that directed it. Wake's Prep. for Death.
2. To go; to make way.
Her face, her hands were torn
With passing through the brakes. Dryden.
3. To make transition from one thing to another.
Others dissatisfied with what they have, and not trusting to those innocent ways of getting more, fall to others, and pass from just to unjust. Temple's Miscellanies.

4. To vanish; to be lost.
Trust not too much to that enchanting face;
Beauty's a charm, but soon the charm will pass. Dryden.
5. To be spent; to go away.
The time, when the thing existed, is the idea of that space of duration, which passed between some fixed period and the being of that thing. Locke.
We see, that one who fixes his thoughts very intently on one thing, so as to take but little notice of the succession of ideas that pass in his mind, whilst he is taken up with that earnest contemplation, lets slip out of his account a good part of that duration, and thinks that time shorter than it is. Locke.
6. To be at an end; to be over.
Their officious haste,
Who would before have born him to the sky;
Like eager Romans, ere all rites were pass'd,
Did let too soon the sacred eagle fly. Dryden.
7. To die; to pass from the present life to another state.
The pangs of death do make him grin;
Disturb him not, let him pass peaceably. Shakespeare.
8. To be changed by regular gradation.
Inflammations are translated from other parts to the lungs;
a pleurisy easily passeth into a peripneumony. Arbutnot.
9. To go beyond bounds. Obsolete.
Why this passer, Mr. Ford:—you are not to go loose any longer, you must be pinnioned. Shakespeare.
10. To be in any state.
I will cause you to pass under the rod, and I will bring you into the bond of the covenant. Ezekiel xx. 37.
11. To be enacted.
Many of the nobility spoke in parliament against those things, which were most grateful to his majesty, and which still passed, notwithstanding their contradiction. Clarendon.
Neither of these bills have yet passed the house of commons, and some think they may be rejected. Swift.
This pernicious project, if passed into a law, would have been of the worst consequence. Swift.
12. To be effected; to exist. Unless this may be thought a noun with the articles suppressed, and be explained thus: it came to the pass that.
I have heard it enquired, how it might be brought to pass that the church should every where have able preachers to instruct the people. Hooker, b. v. f. 3.
When the case required diffimulation, if they used it, it came to pass that the former opinion of their good faith made them almost invisible. Bacon's Essays.
13. To gain reception; to become current: as, this money will not pass.
That trick, said she, will not pass twice. Hudibras.
Their excellencies will not pass for such in the opinion of the learned, but only as things which have less of error in them. Dryden.
False eloquence passeth only where true is not understood, and no body will commend bad writers, that is acquainted with good. Felton on the Classics.
The grossest suppositions pass upon them, that the wild Irish were taken in toys; but that, in some time, they would grow tame. Swift.
14. To be practised artfully or successfully.
This practice hath most shrewdly pass'd upon thee;
But when we know the grounds and authors of it,
Thou shalt be both the plaintiff and the judge. Shakespeare.
Though frauds may pass upon men, they are as open as the light to him that searches the heart. L'Estrange.
15. To be regarded as good or ill.
He rejected the authority of councils, and so do all the reformed; so that this won't pass for a fault in him, 'till 'tis proved one in us. Atterbury.
16. To occur; to be transacted.
If we would judge of the nature of spirits, we must have recourse to our own consciousness of what passes within our own mind. Watts's Logic.
17. To be done.
Zeal may be let loose in matters of direct duty, as in prayers, provided that no indirect act pass upon them to defile them. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
18. To heed; to regard.
As for these silken-coated slaves, I pass not;
It is to you, good people, that I speak,
O'er whom, in time to come, I hope to reign. Shakespeare.
19. To determine finally; to judge capitally.
Though well we may not pass upon his life,
Without the form of justice; yet our pow'r Shall do a courtly to our wrath. Shakespeare.
20. To be supremely excellent.
To thrust; to make a push in fencing.
To see thee fight, to see thee pass thy puncto. Shakespeare.
21. To thrust; to make a push in fencing.
Both advance
Against each other, and with sword and lance
They lash, they foil, they pass, they strive to bore
Their collets. Dryden.
22. To omit.

22. To omit.
Full piteous seems young Alma's case,
As in a luckless gamester's place,
She would not play, yet must not pass.
Prior.
23. To go through the alimentary duct.
Substances hard cannot be dissolved, but they will pass;
but such, whose tenacity exceeds the powers of digestion, will neither pass, nor be converted into aliment.
Arbutnot.
24. To be in a tolerable state.
A middling sort of man was left well enough to pass by his father, but could never think he had enough, so long as any had more.
L'Estrange.
25. To Pass away. To be lost; to glide off.
Defining the soul to be a substance that always thinks, can serve but to make many men suspect, that they have no souls at all, since they find a good part of their lives pass away without thinking.
Locke.
26. To Pass away. To vanish.
To Pass. v. a.
1. To go beyond.
As it is advantageous to a physician to be called to the cure of a declining disease; so it is for a commander to suppress a sedition, which has passed the height: for in both the noxious humour doth first weaken, and afterwards waste to nothing.
Hayward.
2. To go through: as, the horse passed the river.
3. To spend; to live through.
Were I not assured he was removed to advantage, I should pass my time extremely ill without him.
Collier.
- You know in what deluding joys we pass
The night that was by heav'n decreed our last.
Dryden.
- We have examples of such, as pass most of their nights without dreaming.
Locke.
- The people, free from cares, serene and gay,
Pass all their mild untrobbled hours away.
Addison.
- In the midst of the service, a lady, who had passed the winter at London with her husband, entered the congregation.
Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup> 129.
4. To impart to any thing the power of moving.
Dr. Hurstun thinks the principal use of inspiration to be, to move, or pass the blood, from the right to the left ventricle of the heart.
Derham's Physico-Theology.
5. To carry hastily.
I had only time to pass my eye over the medals, which are in great number.
Addison's Remarks on Italy.
6. To transfer to another proprietor.
He that will pass his land,
As I have mine, may set his hand
And heart unto this deed, when he hath read;
And make the purchase spread.
Herbert.
7. To strain; to percolate.
They speak of severing wine from water, passing it through ivy wood.
Bacon's Natural History.
8. To vent; to let out.
How many thousands take upon them to pass their censures on the personal actions of others, and pronounce boldly on the affairs of the publick.
Watts.
- They will commend the work in general, but pass so many fly remarks upon it afterwards, as shall destroy all their cold praises.
Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
9. To utter ceremoniously.
Many of the lords and some of the commons passed some compliments to the two lords.
Clarendon.
10. To utter solemnly.
He pass his promise, and was as good as his word.
L'Estrange.
11. To transmit.
Waller passed over five thousand horse and foot by Newbridge.
Clarendon, l. viii.
12. To put an end to.
This night
We'll pass the business privately and well.
Shakespeare.
13. To surpass; to excel.
She more sweet than any bird on bough
Would oftentimes amongst them bear a part,
And strive to pass, as she could well enough,
Their native music by her skilful art.
Fairy Queen.
- Whom do'st thou pass in beauty?
Ezekiel xxxii. 19.
- Martial, thou gav'st far nobler epigrams
To thy Domitian, than I can my James;
But in my royal subject I pass thee,
Thou flattered'st thine, mine cannot flatter'd be.
B. Johns.
- The ancestor and all his heirs,
Though they in number pass the stars of heav'n,
Are full but one.
Davies.
14. To omit; to neglect.
If you fondly pass our proffer'd offer,
'Tis not the rounder of your old fad'd walls
Can hide you.
Shakespeare's King John.
- Let me o'erleap that custom; for I cannot Put on the gown, stand naked, and entreat them;
Please you that I may pass this doing.
Shakespeare.

- I pass the wars, that spotted liux's make
With their fierce rivals.
Dryden.
15. To transend; to transcend.
I pass their warlike pomp, their proud array.
Dryden.
- They did pass those bounds, and did return since that time.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
16. To admit; to allow.
The money of every one that passeth the account, let the priests take.
2 Kings xii. 4.
- I'll pass them all upon account,
As if your nat'ral self had don't.
Hudibras.
17. To enact a law.
How does that man know, but the decree may be already passed against him, and his allowance of mercy spent.
South.
- Among the laws that pass'd, it was decreed,
That conquer'd Thebes from bondage should be freed.
Dryden's Knight's Tale.
- Could the same parliament which addressed with so much zeal and earnestness against this evil, pass it into a law?
His majesty's ministers proposed the good of the nation, when they advised the passing this patent.
South.
18. To impose fraudulently.
The indulgent mother did her care employ,
And pass'd it on her husband for a boy.
Dryden.
19. To practise artfully; to make succeed.
Time lays open frauds, and after that discovery there is no passing the same trick upon the mice.
L'Estrange.
20. To send from one place to another: as, pass that beggar to his own parish.
21. To Pass away. To spend; to waste.
The father waketh for the daughter, lest she pass away the flower of her age.
Ecclesiast. xlii. 9.
22. To Pass by. To excuse; to forgive.
However God may pass by single sinners in this world; yet when a nation combines against him, the wicked shall not go unpunished.
Tillotson's Sermon.
23. To Pass by. To neglect; to disregard.
How far ought this enterprise to wait upon these other matters, to be mingled with them, or to pass by them, and give law to them, as inferior unto itself?
Bacon.
- It conduces much to our content, if we pass by those things which happen to our trouble, and consider that which is properous; that, by the representation of the better, the worse may be blotted out.
Taylor's Holy Living.
- Certain passages of scripture we cannot, without injury to truth, pass by here in silence.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
24. To Pass over. To omit; to let go unregarded.
Better to pass him o'er, than to relate
The cause I have your mighty fire to hate.
Dryden.
- It does not belong to this place to have that point debated, nor will it hinder our pursuit to pass it over in silence.
Watts.
- The poet passes it over as hastily as he can, as if he were afraid of staying in the cave.
Dryden.
- The queen asked him, who he was; but he passes over this without any reply, and reserves the greatest part of his story to a time of more leisure.
Broom.
- PASS. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A narrow entrance; an avenue.
The straight pass was damm'd
With dead men.
Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
- It would be easy to defend the passes into the whole country, that the king's army should never be able to enter.
Clar.
- Truth is a strong hold, fortified by God and nature, and diligence is properly the understanding's laying siege to it; so that it must be perpetually observing all the avenues and passes to it, and accordingly making its approaches.
South.
2. Passage; road.
The Tyrans had no pass to the Red Sea, but through the territory of Solomon, and by his sufferance.
Raleigh.
- Pity tempts the pass;
But the tough metal of my heart resists.
Dryden.

- PASSAGE. n. f. [passage, French.]
1. Act of passing; travel; course; journey.
The story of such a passage was true, and Jason with the rest went indeed to rob Colchos, to which they might arrive by boat.
Raleigh's History of the World.
- So shalt thou best prepar'd endure Thy mortal passage when it comes.
Milton.
- Live like those who look upon themselves as being only on their passage through this state, but as belonging to that which is to come.
Atterbury's Sermon.
- Though the passage be troublesome, yet it is secure, and shall in a little time bring us safe and peace at the last.
Wake.
2. Road; way.
Human actions are so uncertain, as that seemeth the best course, which hath most passages out of it.
Bacon.
- The land enterprise of Panama was grounded upon a false account, that the passage towards it were no better fortified than Drake had left them.
Bacon.
- Is there yet no other way besides These painful passages, how we may come
To death, and mix with our conatural dust?
Milton.
- Against which open'd from beneath
A passage down to th' earth, a passage wide.
Milton.
- When the passage is open, land will be turned most to great

6. Occurrence; hap.
It is no act of common passage, but
A strain of rareness.
Shakespeare.
7. Unsettled state; aptness by condition or nature to change the place of abode.
Most traders in Ireland are but factors; the cause must be rather an ill opinion of security than of gain: the last intices the poorer traders, young beginners, or those of passage; but without the first, the rich will never settle in the country.
Temple's Miscellaneous.
- In man the judgment shoots at flying game;
A bird of passage! lost as soon as found;
Now in the moon perhaps, now under ground.
Pope.
8. Incident; transaction.

- What hollowing, and what stir is this?
These are my mates that make their way by law,
Have some unhappy passenger in chase.
Shakespeare.
- The nodding horror of whole shady brows Threats the forlorn and wand'ring passenger.
Milton.
- Apelles, when he had finished any work, exposed it to the sight of all passengers, and concealed himself to hear the censure of his faults.
Dryden's Discourse.
2. One who hires in any vehicle the liberty of travelling.
The diligent pilot in a dangerous tempest doth attend the unskillful words of a passenger.
Sidney.
- PASSENGER falcon. n. f. A kind of migratory hawk.
Anf.
- PASSER. n. f. [from pass.] One who passes; one that is upon the road.
Under you ride the home and foreign shipping in so near a distance, that, without troubling the passer or borrowing Stentor's voice, you may confer with any in the town.
Carver.
- Have we so soon forgot,
When, like a matron, butcher'd by her sons,
And cast beside some common way a spectacle
Of horror and affright to passers by,
Our groaning country bled at every vein.
Rowe.
- PASSIBILITY. n. f. [passibilitas, Fr. from passible.] Quality of receiving impressions from external agents.
The last doubt, touching the passibility of the matter of the heavens, is drawn from the eclipses of the sun and moon.
Hakewill on Providence.
- PASSIBLE. adj. [passible, Fr. passibilis, Lat.] Susceptive of impressions from external agents.
Theodore disputeth with great earnestness, that God cannot be said to suffer; but he thereby meaneth Christ's divine nature against Apollinarius, which held even deity itself passible.
Hooker, l. v. 53.
- PASSIBLENESS. n. f. [from passible.] Quality of receiving impressions from external agents.
It drew after it the heresy of the passibility of the deity, because the deity of Christ was become, in their conceits, the same nature with the humanity that was passible.
Brewster on Languages.
- PASSING. participial adj. [from pass.]
1. Supreme; surpassing others; eminent.
No strength of arms shall win this noble fort,
Or shake this puissant wall, such passing might Have spells and charms, if they be said aright.
Fairfax.
- Sir Hudibras his passing worth,
The manner how he talk'd forth.
Hudibras.
2. It is used adverbially to enforce the meaning of another word.
Exceeding.
Oberon is passing fell and wroth.
Shakespeare.

Many in each region passing fair
As the noon sky; more like to goddesses Than mortal creatures. Milton's Paradise Lost.
She was not only passing fair,
But was withal discreet and debonaire. Dryden.
While thus we stood as in a fount,
Full soon by bonfire and by bell,
We learnt our liege was passing well. Gay.
PA'SSINGBELL. n. f. [passing and bell.] The bell which rings at the hour of departure, to obtain prayers for the passing soul:
it is often used for the bell, which rings immediately after death.
Those loving papers,
Thicken on you now, as pray'rs ascend
To heaven in troops at a good man's passingbell. Donne.
A talk of tumult, and a breath
Would serve him as his passingbell to death. Daniel.
Before the passingbell begun,
The news through half the town has run. Swift.
PA'SSION. n. f. [passion, French; passio, Latin.]
1. Any effect caused by external agency.
The differences of mouldable and not mouldable, scissible and not scissible, and many other passions of matter are plebeian notions, applied to the instruments men ordinarily practise. Bacon.
A body at rest affords us no idea of any active power to move, and when, set in motion, it is rather a passion than an action in it. Locke.
2. Violent commotion of the mind.
All the other passions fleet to air,
As doubtful thoughts and rash embrac'd despair. Shakefp.
Thee every thing becomes, to chide, to laugh,
To weep: whole every passion fully strives
To make itself in thee fair and admired. Shakefp.
Vex'd I am
Of late, with passions of some difference. Shakefp.
I am doubtful, left
You break into some merry passion,
And so offend him: Shakefp.
If you should smile, he grows impatient.
In loving thou do'st well, in passion not;
Wherein true love consists not. Milton's Par. Lost.
Cruel his eye, but cast
Signs of remorse and passion, to behold
The fellows of his crime condemn'd
For ever now to have their lot in pain. Milton's Par. Lost.
Passion's too fierce to be in fetters bound,
And nature flies him like enchanted ground. Dryden.
All the art of rhetoric, besides order and perspicuity, only moves the passions, and thereby misleads the judgment. Locke.
3. Anger.
The word passion signifies the receiving any action in a large philosophical sense; in a more limited philosophical sense, it signifies any of the affections of human nature; as love, fear, joy, sorrow: but the common people confine it only to anger. Watts.
4. Zeal; ardour.
Where statesmen are ruled by faction and interest, they can have no passion for the glory of their country, nor any concern for the figure it will make. Addison on Medals.
5. Love.
For your love,
You kill'd her father: you confest'd you drew
A mighty argument to prove your passion for the daughter.
Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.
He, to grate me more,
Publicly own'd his passion for Ametris. Roscoe.
Survey yourself, and then forgive your slave,
Think what a passion such a form must have. Granville.
6. Eagerness.
Abate a little of that violent passion for fine cloaths, so predominant in your sex. Swift.
7. Emphatically. The last suffering of the redeemer of the world.
He shew'd himself alive after his passion, by many infallible proofs. Acts i. 3.
TO PASSION. v. n. [passionner, Fr. from the noun.] To be extremely agitated; to express great commotion of mind.
Obsolete.
'Twas Ariadne passioning Shakefp.
PASSION-FLOWER. n. f. [granadilla, Latin.]
Passion-flower hath a double calyx, the first consisting of three leaves, the other of five, which expand in form of a star: the flowers consist of five leaves each, and are of a rosaceous form: in the centre of the flower arises the pointal, with a crown fringed at the bottom, but furnished with a tender embryo at the top, on which stand three clubs, under which are the stamina, with rough obtuse apices, which always incline downward; the embryo turns to an oval or globular fruit, fleshy, and consisting of one cell, which is full of seeds adhering to the sides, and covered with a sort of hood or veil. Milton.

PA'SSION-WEEK. n. f. The week immediately preceding Easter, named in commemoration of our Saviour's crucifixion.
PA'SSIONATE. adj. [passionné, French.]
1. Moved by passion; causing or expressing great commotion of mind.
My whole endeavour is to resolve the conscience, and to show what, in this controversy, the heart is to think, if it will follow the light of sound and sincere judgment, without either cloud of prejudice or mist of passionate affection. Hosker.
Thucydides observes, that men are much more passionate for injustice than for violence; because the one coming as from an equal seems rapine; when the other proceeding from one stronger is but the effect of necessity. Clarendon.
Good angels looked upon this ship of Noah's with a passionate concern for its safety. Burnet.
Men, upon the near approach of death, have been roused up into such a lively sense of their guilt, such a passionate degree of concern and remorse, that, if ten thousand ghosts had appeared to them, they scarce could have had a fuller conviction of their danger. Atterbury's Sermons.
2. Eagerly moved to anger.
Homer's Achilles is haughty and passionate, impatient of any restraint by laws, and arrogant in arms. Prior.
TO PASSIONATE. v. a. [from passion.] An old word. Obsolete.
1. To affect with passion.
Great pleasure mix'd with piteous regard,
That godly king and queen did passionate,
Whilst they his piteous adventures heard,
That oft they did lament his luckless state. Fairy Queen.
2. To express passionately.
Thy niece and I want hands,
And cannot passionate our tenfold grief
With folded arms. Shakefp.
PA'SSIONATELY. adv. [from passionate.]
1. With passion; with desire, love or hatred; with great commotion of mind.
Whoever passionately covets any thing he has not, has lost his hold. L'Estrange.
If sorrow expresses itself never so loudly and passionately, and discharge itself in never so many tears, yet it will no more purge a man's heart, than the washing of his hands can cleanse the rottenness of his bones. South's Sermons.
I made Melinda, in opposition to Nourmahal, a woman passionately loving of her husband, patient of injuries and contempt, and constant in her kindness. Dryden.
2. Angerily.
They lay the blame on the poor little ones, sometimes passionately enough, to divert it from themselves. Locke.
PA'SSIONATENESS. n. f. [from passionate.]
1. State of being subject to passion.
2. Vehemence of mind.
To love with some passionateness the person you would marry, is not only allowable but expedient. Bosj.
PA'SSIVE. adj. [passif, French; passivus, Latin.]
1. Receiving impression from some external agent.
High above the ground
Their march was, and the passive air upbore
Their nimble tread. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The active informations of the intellect, filling the passive reception of the will, like form closing with matters, grew adequate into a third and distinct perfection of practice. South.
As the mind is wholly passive in the reception of all its simple ideas, so it exerts several acts of its own, whereby, out of its simple ideas, the other is formed. Locke.
The vis inertiae is a passive principle by which bodies persist in their motion or rest, receive motion in proportion to the force impressing it, and resist as much as they are resisted:
by this principle alone, there never could have been any motion in the world. Newton's Optics.
2. Unresisting; not opposing.
Not those alone, who passive own her laws,
But who, weak rebels, more advance her cause. Duncan.
3. Suffering; not acting.
4. [In grammar.]
A verb passive is that which signifies passion or the effect of action: as, doccor, I am taught. Clarke's Lat. Gram.
PA'SSIVELY. adv. [from passive.] With a passive nature.
Though some are passively inclin'd,
The greater part degenerate from their kind. Dryden.
PA'SSIVENESS. n. f. [from passive.]
1. Quality of receiving impression from external agents.
2. Passibility; power of suffering.
We shall lose our passiveness with our being, and be as incapable of suffering as heaven can make us. Decay of Piety.
PA'SSIVITY. n. f. [from passive.] Passiveness. An innovated word.
There being no mean between penetrability and impen-etrability, between passivity and activity, these being contrary and opposite, the infinite rarefaction of the one quality is the position of its contrary. Chapman's Philosophical Principles.
PA'SSOVER.

PA'SSOVER. n. f. [passi and over.]
1. A feast instituted among the Jews in memory of the time when God, smiting the first-born of the Egyptians, passed over the habitations of the Hebrews.
The Jews passover was at hand, and Jesus went up. Jo. ii. 13.
The Lord's passover, commonly called Easter, was ordered by the common law to be celebrated every year on a Sunday. Ayliffe's Parergon.
2. The sacrifice killed.
Take a lamb, and kill the passover. Exodus xii. 21.
PA'SSPORT. n. f. [passport, Fr.] Permission of egress.
Under that pretext, fain she would have given a secret
passport to her affection. Sidney.
Giving his reason passport for to pass
Whither it would, so it would let him die. Sidney.
Let him depart; his passport shall be made,
And crowns for convoy put into his purse. Shakefp.
Having used extreme caution in granting passports to Ireland, he conceived that paper not to have been delivered. Clar.
The gospel has then only a free admission into the assent of the understanding, when it brings a passport from a rightly disposed will, as being the faculty of dominion, that commands all, that thrusts out, and lets in, what objects it pleases. South's Sermons.
Admitted in the shining throng,
He shows the passport which he brought along;
His passport is his innocence and grace,
Well known to all the natives of the place. Dryden.
At our meeting in another world;
For thou hast drunk thy passport out of this. Dryden.
PA'ST. participial adj. [from passi.]
1. Not present; not to come.
Passi, and to come, seem best; things present worst. Shak.
For several months passi, papers have been written upon the best public principle, the love of our country. Swift.
This not alone has shone on ages passi,
But lights the present, and shall warm the last. Pope.
2. Spent; gone through; undergone.
A life of glorious labours passi. Pope.
PA'ST. n. f. Elliptically used for past time.
The passi is all by death possess'd,
And frugal fate that guards the rest,
By giving bids us live to-day. Penton.
PA'ST. proprietion.
1. Beyond in time.
Sarah was delivered of a child, when she was passi age. Hebrews xi. 11.
2. No longer capable of.
Fervent prayers he made, when he was esteem'd passi sense, and so spent his last breath in committing his soul unto the Almighty. Hayward.
3. Beyond; out of reach of.
We must not Prostitute our passi cure malady
To empiricks. Shakefp.
What's gone? and what's passi help,
Should be passi grief. Shakefp.
Many men have not yet finned themselves passi all sense or feeling, but have some regrets; and when their spirits are at any time disturbed with the sense of their guilt, they are for a little time more watchful over their ways; but they are soon disheartened. Calamy's Sermons.
Love, when once passi government, is consequently passi flame. L'Estrange.
Her life she might have had; but the despair
Of saving his, had put it passi her care. Dryden.
I'm stupify'd with sorrow, passi relief Of tears. Dryden.
That the bare receiving a sum should sink a man into a servile state, is passi my comprehension. Collier on Pride.
That he means paternal power, is passi doubt from the inference he makes. Locke.
4. Beyond; further than.
We will go by the king's high way, until we be passi thy borders. Numbers xxi. 22.
5. Above; more than.
The northern Irish Scots have bows not passi three quarters of a yard long, with a string of wretched hemp and their arrows not much above an ell. Spenser on Ireland.
The same inundation was not deep, not passi forty foot from the ground. Bacon.
PA'STE. n. f. [paste, French.]
1. Any thing mixed up so as to be viscous and tenacious: such as flour and water for bread or pies; or various kinds of earth mingled for the potter.
Except you could bray Christendom in a mortar, and mould it into a new paste, there is no possibility of an holy war. Bacon's Holy War.
With particles of heav'nly fire
The God of nature did his soul inspire;
Which wife Prometheus temper'd into paste,
And mixt with living streams, the godlike image cast. Dryd.

PAS

When the gods moulded up the paste of man,
Some of their dough was left upon their hands. Dryden.
He has the whitest hand that ever you saw, and raises paste better than any woman. Addison's Spectator, No 482.
2. Flour and water boiled together so as to make a cement.
3. Artificial mixture, in imitation of precious stones.
TO PASTE. v. a. [pastre, Fr. from the noun.] To fasten with paste.
By pastre the vowels and consonants on the sides of dice, his eldest son played himself into spelling. Locke.
Young creatures have learned their letters and syllables, by having them pastre upon little flat tablets. Watts.
PA'STERBOARD. n. f. [paste and board.] Masses made anciently by pastre one paper on another: now made sometimes by macerating paper and casting it in moulds, sometimes by pounding old cordage, and casting it in forms.
Tintoret made chambers of board and pasteboard, proportioned to his models, with doors and windows, through which he distributed, on his figures, artificial lights. Dryden.
I would not make myself merry even with a piece of paste- board, that is invested with a publick character. Addison.
PA'STERBOARD. adj. Made of pasteboard.
Put silkworms on whitened brown paper into a pasteboard
box. Mortimer's Husbandry.
PA'STEL. n. f. An herb.
PA'STERN. n. f. [pasturon, French.]
1. The knee of an horse.
I will not change my horse with any that treads on four pasterns. Shakefp.
The colt that for a stallion is design'd,
Upright he walks on pasterns firm and straight,
His motions easy, prancing in his gait. Dryden.
Being heavy, he should not tread stiff, but have a pastern made him, to break the force of his weight: by this his body hangs on the hoof, as a coach doth by the leathers. Grew.
2. The legs of an human creature in contempt.
So straight the walk'd, and on her pasterns high:
If seeing her behind, he lik'd her pace,
Now turning short, he better lik'd her face. Dryden.
PA'STIL. n. f. [pastillus, Lat. pastille, Fr.] A roll of paste.
To draw with dry colours, make long pastils, by grinding red led with strong wort, and so roll them up like pencils, drying them in the sun. Peascham on Drawing.
PA'STIME. n. f. [passi and time.] Sport; amusement; diversion.
It was more requisite for Zelma's hurt to rest, than fit up at those pastimes; but they, that felt no wound but one, earnestly desired to have the pastimes. Sidney, b. i.
I'll be as patient as a gentle stream;
And make a pastime of each weary step,
'Till the last step has brought me to my love. Shakefp.
Pastime passing excellent,
If husbanded with modesty. Shakefp.
With these
Find pastime, and bear rule; thy realm is large. Milton.
A man, much addicted to luxury, recreation and pastime, should never pretend to devote himself entirely to the sciences;
unless his soul be so refined, that he can taste these entertainments eminently in his closet. Watts.
PA'STOR. n. f. [pastor, Latin; pasteur, old French.]
1. A shepherd.
Receive this present by the muses made,
The pipe on which the Ascræan pastor play'd. Dryden.
The pastor shears their hoary beards,
And cales of their hair the loaden herds. Dryden.
2. A clergyman who has the care of a flock; one who has souls to feed with sound doctrine.
The pastor maketh suits of the people, and they with one voice testify a general assent thereto, or he joyfully beginneth, and they with like alacrity follow, dividing between them the sentences wherewith they strive, which shall much shew his own, and stir up others zeal to the glory of God. Hosker, b. v. f. 39.
The first branch of the great work belonging to a pastor of the church, was to teach. South's Sermons.
A breach in the general form of worship was reckoned too unpopular to be attempted, neither was the expedient then found out of maintaining separate pastors out of private purposes. Swift.
PA'STORAL. adj. [pastoralis, Latin; pastoral, French.]
1. Rural; rustick; becoming shepherds; imitating shepherds.
In those pastoral pastimes, a great many days were sent to follow their flying predecessors. Sidney.
2. Relating to the care of souls.
Their lord and master taught concerning the pastoral care he had over his own flock. Hosker, b. v. f. 19.
The bishop of Salisbury recommended the tenth satire of Juvenal, in his pastoral letter, to the serious perusal of the divines of his diocese. Dryden.
PA'STORAL. n. f. A poem in which any action or passion is represented by its effects upon a country life; or according to the common practice in which speakers take upon them the character of shepherds; an idyl; a bucolick.
19 G Pastoral

PAT

Pastoral is an imitation of the action of a shepherd, the form of this imitation is dramatick or narrative, or mixed of both, the fable simple, the manners not too polite nor too rustick. Pope.

The best actors in the world, for tragedy, comedy, history, pastoral. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

There ought to be the same difference between pastorals and elegies, as between the life of the country and the court; the latter should be smooth, clean, tender and passionate: the thoughts may be bold, more gay, and more elevated than in pastoral. Walsh.

PASTRY. n. f. [pastryerie, Fr. from pastr.]

- The act of making pies.
  - Let never fresh machines your pastry try, Unless grandees or magistrates are by, Then you may put a dwarf into a pye. King.

P A T

5. Not hasty; not viciously eager or impetuous.
Too indolent to be great,
Nor patient to expect the turns of fate,
They open'd camps deform'd by civil fight. Prior.
- PA'TIENT. n. f. [patient, Fr.]
1. That which receives impressions from external agents.
Malice is a passion so impetuous and precipitate, that it often involves the agent and the patient. Gov. of the Tongue.
To proper patients he kind agents brings,
In various leagues binds disagreeing things. Creech.
Action and passion are modes which belong to substances: when a smith with a hammer strikes a piece of iron, the hammer and the smith are both agents or subjects of action; the one supreme, and the other subordinate: the iron is the patient or the subject of passion, in a philosophical sense, because it receives the operation of the agent. Watts's Logic.
2. A person diseased. It is commonly used of the relation between the sick and the physician.
You deal with me like a physician, that seeing his patient in a pestilential fever, should chide instead of administering help, and bid him be sick no more. Sidney.
Through ignorance of the disease, through unreasonable-ness of the time, instead of good he worketh hurt, and out of one evil throweth the patient into many miseries. Spenser.
A physician uses various methods for the recovery of sick persons; and though all of them are disagreeable, his patients are never angry. Addison.
3. It is sometimes, but rarely used absolutely for a sick person.
Nor will the raging fever's fire abate
With golden canopies or beds of state;
But the poor patient will as soon be found On the hard matress of the mother ground. Dryden.
- TO PA'TIENT. v. a. [patientis, Fr.] To compose one's self; to behave with patience. Obsolete.
Patient yourself, madam, and pardon me. Shakespeare.

A fencer and the scandal of the town. Dryden.
Your daughters are all married to wealthy patricians. Swift.
- PATRIMONIAL. adj. [patrimonial, Fr. from patrimonium.] Possessed by inheritance.
The expence of the duke of Ormond's own great patrimonial estate, that came over at that time, is of no small consideration in the stock of this kingdom. Temple.
Their patrimonial both the Spaniards keep,
And Philip first taught Philip how to sleep. Dryden.
- PA'TRIMONY. n. f. [patrimonium, Latin; patrimonie, Fr.] An estate possessed by inheritance.
Inclosures they would not forbid, for that had been to forbid the improvement of the patrimonie of the kingdom. Bacon.
So might the heir, whose father hath, in play,
Wasted a thousand pounds of ancient rent,
By painful earning of one groat a day,
Hope to restore the patrimonie spent. Devis.
In me all
Posterity stands curs'd! fair patrimonie
That I must leave ye, sons. Milton's Par. Lost.
For his redemption, all my patrimonie
I am ready to forego and quit. Milton's Agonistes.
Their ships like wasted patrimonies flew;
Where the thin faint ring trees admit the light,
And shun each other's shadows as they grow. Dryden.
The shepherd last appears,
And with him all his patrimonie bears;
His house and household gods, his trade of war,
His bow and quiver, and his trusty cur. Dryden.
- PA'TRIOT. n. f. One whose ruling passion is the love of his country.
Patriots who for sacred freedom stood.
The firm patriot there,
Who made the welfare of mankind his care,
Shall know he conquer'd. Addison's Cato.
Here tears shall flow from a more gen'rous cause,
Such tears as patriots shed for dying laws. Pope.

- PATROL. n. f. [patrouille, patrouille, old French.]
1. The act of going the rounds in a garrison to observe that orders are kept.
2. Those that go the rounds.
O thou! by whose almighty nod the scale
Of empire rises, or alternate falls,
Send forth the saving virtues round the land
In bright patrol. Thomson's Summer.
- TO PATROUILLER. v. n. [patrouiller, Fr.] To go the rounds in a camp or garrison.
These out guards of the mind are sent abroad
And still patrolling beat the neighb'ring road,
Or to the parts remote obedient fly,
Keep posts advanc'd, and on the frontier lie. Blackmore.
- PA'TRON. n. f. [patron, Fr. patronus, Latin.]
1. One who countenances, supports or protects. Commonly a wretch who supports with insolence, and is paid with flattery.
I'll plead for you, as for my patron. Shakespeare.
Ne'er let me pass in silence Dorset's name;
Ne'er cease to mention the continu'd debt,
Which the great patron only would forget. Prior.
2. A guardian saint.
Thou amongst those faints, whom thou do'st see,
Shall be a faint, and thine own nation's friend
And patron. Fairy Queen, b. i.
St. Michael is mentioned as the patron of the Jews, and is now taken by the Christians, as the protector general of our religion. Dryden.
3. Advocate; defender; vindicator.
We are no patrons of those things; the best defence whereof is speedy redress and amendment. Hooker, b. ii. f. 1.
Whether the minds of men have naturally imprinted on them the ideas of extension and number, I leave to those who are the patrons of innate principles. Locke.
4. One who has donation of ecclesiastical preferment.
- PA'TRONAGE. n. f. [from patron.]

An out-law in a castle keeps,
And uses it to patronage his theft. Shakespeare.
- PATRONAL. adj. [from patronus, Lat.] Protecting; supporting; guarding; defending; doing the office of a patron.
The name of the patron being discovered unto their enemies, their penates and paternal gods might be called forth by charms. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- PA'TRONESS. n. f. [feminine of patron; patrona, Lat.]
1. A female that defends, countenances or supports.
Of close escapes the aged patroness,
Blacker than earl, her sable mantle spread,
When with two trusty maids in great distress,
Both from mine uncle and my realm I fled. Pope.
All things should be guided by her direction, as the sovereign patroness and protectress of the enterprise. Bacon.
Beside me night, best patroness of grief,
Over the pole thy thickest mantle throw.
He petitioned his patroness, who gave him for answer, that providence had assigned every bird its proportion. L'Estrange.
It was taken into the protection of my patronesses at court. Swift.
2. A female guardian saint.
TO PATRONISE. v. a. [from patron.] To protect; to support; to defend; to countenance.
Churchmen are to be had in due respect for their work sake, and protected from scorn; but if a clergyman be loose and scandalous, he must not be patronized nor winked at. Bacon.
All tenderness of conscience against good laws, is hypocrisy, and patronized by none but men of deliquency, who look upon it as the fittest engine to get into power. South's Sermons.
I have been esteemed and patronized by the grandfather, the father and the son. Dryden.
- PATRONYMIC. n. f. [πατρωνυμικός, patronymique, Fr.] Name expressing the name of the father or ancestor: as, Tydides, the son of Tydeus.

By such as wander through the forest walks. Thomson.
- PA'TTERN. n. f. [patron, Fr. patronus, Dutch.]
1. The original propoed to imitation; the archetype; that which is to be copied; an exemplar.
As though your desire were, that the churches of old should be patterns for us to follow, and even glasses wherein we might see the practice of that which by you is gathered out of scripture. Hooker.
I will be the pattern of all patience;
I will say nothing. Shakespeare. King Lear.
A pattern to all princes living with her,
And all that shall succeed. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.
The example and pattern of the church of Rome. Clarendon.
Lose not the honour you have early won,
But stand the blameless pattern of a son. Dryden.
Measure the excellency of a virtuous mind; not as it is the copy, but the pattern of regal power. Grew.
This pattern should be our guide, in our present state of pilgrimage. Atterbury's Sermons.
Christianity commands us to act after a nobler pattern, than the virtues even of the most perfect men. Rogers.
Take pattern by our sister star,
Delude at once and bless our fight;
When you are seen, be seen from far,
And chiefly chuse to shine by night. Swift.

PEACHICK. n. f. [pea and chick.] The chicken of a peacock.
Does the fiveling peachick think to make a cuckold of me. Southern.
PEACOCK. n. f. [para, Saxon, pavo, Lat.] Of this word the etymology is not known: perhaps it is peak cock, from the tuft of feathers on its head; the peak of women being an ancient ornament: if it be not rather a corruption of baucog, Fr. from the more striking lustre of its spangled train; A fowl eminent for the beauty of its feathers, and particularly of his tail.
Let frantick Talbot triumph for a while;
And, like a peacock, sweep along his tail. Shakefp.
The birds that are hardest to be drawn, are the tame birds; as cock, turkey-cock and peacock. Peacham.
The peacock, not at thy command, assumes
His glorious train; nor elrich her rare plumes. Sandys.
The peacock's plumes thy tackle must not fail,
Nor the dear purchase of the fable's tail. Gay.
PEAHEN. n. f. [pea and hen; pava, Lat.] The female of the peacock.
PEAK. n. f. [peac, Saxon; pique, pic, French.]
1. The top of a hill or eminence.
Thy sister seek,
Or on Meander's bank or Latmus' peak. Prior.
2. Any thing acuminated.
3. The rising forepart of a head-dress.
TO PEAK. v. n. [pepinus, Spanish, little, perhaps lean: but I believe this word has some other derivation: we say a withered man has a sharp face; Falstaff dying, is said to have a nose as sharp as a pea: from this observation, a sickly man is said to peak or grow acuminated.
1. To look sickly.
Weary fortnights, nine times nine,
Shall he dwindle, peak and pine. Shakefp. Macbeth.
2. To make a mean figure; to inoak.
I, a dull and muddy mettel'd rascal, peak,
Like John a dreams, unpregnant of my cause, Shakefp.
The peaking cornuto her husband, dwelling in a continual

PEA

- larum of jealousy, comes me in the instant of our encounter. Shakefp.
PEAL. n. f. [Perhaps from pello, pellere tympana.] Shakefp.
1. A succession of loud sounds: as, of bells, thunder, cannon, loud instruments.
They were saluted by the way, with a fair peal of artillery from the tower. Hayward.
The breach of faith cannot be so highly exprest, as in that it shall be the last peal to call the judgments of God upon men. Bacon's Essays.
Woods of oranges will smell into the sea perhaps twenty miles; but what is that, since a peal of ordinance will do as much, which moveth in a small compass? Bacon.
A peal shall rouse their sleep;
Then all thy saints assembled, thou shalt judge Bad men and angels. Milt. Par. Reg.
I myself,
Vanquish'd with a peal of words, O weaknes;
Gave up my fort of silence to a woman. Milton.
From the Moors camp the noise grows louder still;
Peals of shouts that rend the heav'n's, Dryden.
Oh! for a peal of thunder that would make Earth, sea and air, and heaven and Cato tremble! Addis.
2. It is once used by Shakefp. for a low dull noise, but improperly.
Ere to black Hecat's fummions
The shard-born beetle with his drowsy hums,
Hath rung night's yawning peal, there shall be done
A deed of dreadful note. Shakefp. Macbeth.
TO PEAL. v. n. [from the noun.] To play solemnly and loud.
Let the pealing organ blow,
To the full-voic'd quire below,
In service high and anthems clear,
As may with sweetest through mine ear,
Dissolve me into extacies,
And bring all heav'n before my eyes. Milton.
The pealing organ, and the pausing choir;
And the last words, that dust to dust convey'd. Titchill.
TO PEAL. v. a.
1. To assail with noise.
Nor was his ear less peal'd
With noises loud and ruinous, than when Bellona storms,
With all her batt'ring engines bent to rafe
Some capital city. Milton's Paradise Lost.
2. To stir with some agitation: as, to peal the pot, is when it boils to stir the liquor therein with a ladle. Any.
PEAR. n. f. [poire, French; pyram, Latin.]
The flower consists of several leaves, placed in a circular order, and expand in form of a rose, whose flower cup becomes a fleshy fruit, which is more produced toward the foot-stalk than the apple, but is hollowed like a navel at the extreme part; the cells, in which the seeds are lodged, are separated by soft membranes, and the seeds are oblong. The species are eighty-four: 1. Little musk pear, commonly called the supreme. 2. The Ohio pear, commonly called the little bastard musk pear. 3. August shall bear the form of a young man, of a choleric aspect, upon his arm a basket of pears, plums and apples. Pear.
The juicy pear
Lies in a soft profusion scatter'd round. Thomson.
PEARL. n. f. [perle, Fr. perla, Spanish; supposed by Salmasius to come from perula, Latin.]
Pearls, though esteemed of the number of gems by our jewellers, are but a distemper in the creature that produces them: the fish in which pearls are most frequently found is the East Indian berbes or pearl oyster: others are found to produce pearls; as the common oyster, the muscle, and various other kinds; but the Indian pearls are superior to all: some pearls have been known of the size of a pigeon's egg; as they increase in size, they are less frequent and more valued: the true shape of the pearl is a perfect round; but some of a considerable size are of the shape of a pear, and serve for ear-rings: their colour ought to be a pure, clear and brilliant white, and they bring their natural polish with them, to which art can never attain: it is reported, that pearls naturally of a yellowish cast, never alter, that this tinge never grows deeper, and that the lustre of the pearl never fades, which is therefore justly preferred by the Orientals to such as are purely white: from the name unio given to the pearl, some have been led to believe, that there was only one found in each shell; this is indeed usually the case in oysters and muscles; but in the oriental pearl shell six or eight are frequent, and sometimes twenty or more. Hill.
A pearl-julep was made of a distilled milk. Wifeman.
Flow'rs pursled, blue and white,
Like sapphire, pearl, in rich embroidery Buckled below fair knighthood's bending knee. Shakefp.
Cataracts pearl-coloured, and those of the colour of burnished iron, are esteemed proper to endure the needle. Sharp.
PEARL. n. f. [albugo, Lat.] A white speck or film growing on the eye. Ainsworth.
PEARLED. adj. [from pearl.] Adorned or set with pearls.
The water nymphs
Held up their pearled wrists, and took her in,
Bearing her straight to aged Nereus' hall. Milton.
PEARLEVED. adj. [pearl and eye.] Having a speck in the eye.
PEARLGRASS. n. f. Plants. Ainsworth.
PEARLWORT. n. f. Plants.
PEARLY. adj. [from pearl.]
1. Abounding with pearls; containing pearls.

Moist nutriment. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Another was invested with a pearly scull, having the features finely displayed upon its surface. Woodward.
2. Resembling pearls.
Which when she heard, full pearly floods
I in her eyes might view. Dryden.
'Tis sweet the blushing morn to view,
And plains adorn'd with pearly dew,
For what the day devours, the nightly dew Shall to the morn in pearly drops renew. Dryden.
PEARMAYN. n. f. An apple.
PEARMAYN is an excellent and well known fruit. Mortimer.
PEARTREE. n. f. [pear and tree.] The tree that bears pears.
The peartree critics will have to borrow his name of wee, fire. Bacon.
PEASANT. n. f. [paissant, Fr.] A hind; one whose business is rural labour.
He holdeth himself a gentleman, and scorneth to work, which, he faith, is the life of a peasant or churl. Scyer.
Our superfluous jacqueys and our peasants,
Who in unnecessary action swarm
About our squares of battle. Shakefp.
I had rather coin my heart, than wring
From the hard hands of peasants their vile trash. Shakefp.
'Tis difficult for us, who are bred up with the same infirmities about us with which we were born, to raise our thoughts and imaginations to those intellectual perfections that attended our nature in the time of innocence, as it is for a peasant bred up

- in the obscurities of a cottage, to fancy in his mind the unseen splendours of a court. South's Sermons.
The citizens would bring two thousand men, with which they could make head against twelve thousand peasants. Addison.
PEASANTRY. n. f. Peasants; rusticks; country people.
How many then should cover, that stand bare?
How much low peasantry would then be gleaned
From the true seed of honour? how much honour Picked from the chaff? Shakefp. Merch. of Venice.
The peasantry in France under a much heavier pressure of want and poverty than the day-labourers of England of the reformed religion, understood it much better than those of a higher condition among us.
PEASCOD. n. f. [pea, cod and shell.] The hulk that contains peas. Shakefp. King Lear.
PEASHELL. n. f. tains peas.
Thou art a peashell as big as a small peashell. Shakefp. King Lear.
I saw a green caterpillar as big as a small peashell. Walton.
As peashells once I pluck'd, I chanc'd to see
One that was closely fill'd with three times three.
I o'er the door the spell in secret laid. Gay.
PEASE. n. f. [Pea, when it is mentioned as a single body, makes peas; but when spoken of collectively, as food or a species, it is called pease, anciently peason; pira, Saxon; pois, French; pise, Italian; pisum, Latin.] Food of pease.
Sowe peason and beans in the wane of the moon;
Who soweth them sooner, he soweth too soone. Tusser.
Pease, deprived of any aromatic parts, are mild and demulcent; but, being full of aerial particles, are flatulent. Art.
PEAT. n. f. A species of turf used for fire.
Turf and peat, and cowtheads are cheap fuels and last long. Bacon's Natural History.
Carew, in his survey of Cornwall, mentions nuts found in peat-earth two miles East of St. Michael's mount. Woodw.
PEAT. n. f. [from petit, Fr.] A little fondling; a darling; a dear play thing. It is now commonly called pet.
A pretty peat! it is best put finger in the eye,
An the knew why. Shakefp. Taming of the Shrew.
A citizen and his wife
Both riding on one horse, upon the way
Lover took; the wench a pretty peat. Donne.
PEBBLE. n. f. [pebula, Saxon.] A stone distinct from flints, being not in layers, but in one homogeneous mass, though sometimes of many colours. Popularly a small stone.
Through the midst of it ran a sweet brook, which did both hold the eye open with her azure streams, and yet seek to close the eye with the purling noise it made upon the pebbles it ran over. Sidney, b. i.
The bishop and the duke of Gloster's men, Forbidden late to carry any weapon,
Have fill'd their pockets full of pebblestones. Shakefp.
Suddenly a file of boys deliver'd such a shower of pebbles loose shot, that I was fain to draw mine honour in. Shakefp.
You may see pebbles gathered together, and a crust of cement between them, as hard as the pebbles. Bacon.
Collecting toys,
As children gath'ring pebbles on the shore. Milton.
Providence permitted not the strength of the earth to spend itself in base gravel and pebbles instead of quarries of stones. More's Antidote against Atheism.
Winds murmur'd through the leaves your long delay;
And fountains o'er the pebbles chid your stay. Dryden.
Another body, that hath only the resemblance of an ordinary pebble, shall yield a metallic and valuable matter. Woodw.
PEBBLE-CRYSTAL. n. f.
The crystal, in form of nodules, is found lodged in the earthy strata left in a train by the water departing at the conclusion of the deluge: this sort, called by the lapidaries pebble-crystal, is in shape irregular. Woodward.
PEBBLED. adj. [from pebble.] Sprinkled or abounding with pebbles.
This bank fair spreading in a pebbled shore. Thomson.
PEBBLY. adj. [from pebble.] Full of pebbles.
Straw'd bibulous above I see the sands,
The pebbly gravel next. Thomson.
PECCABILITY. n. f. [from peccable.] State of being subject to sin.
Where the common peccability of mankind is urged to induce commiseration towards the offenders; if this be of force in, where the concurrence of the will renders the person more inexcusable, it will surely hold much more in bare error which is purely involuntary. Decay of Piety.
PECCABLE. adj. [from pecca, Lat.] Incident to sin.
PECCADILLO. [Spanish; peccadillo, French.] A petty fault; a slight crime; a venial offence.
He means those little vices, which we call follies and the defects of the human understanding, or at most the peccadillos of life, rather than the tragical vices to which men are hurried by their unruly passions. Dryden.
'Tis low ebb with his accusers, when such peccadillos as these are put in to swell the charge. Attorney.

PECCANCY.

PEC

PECCANCY. n. f. [from peccant.] Bad quality.
Apply refrigerants without any preceding evacuation, because the disease took its origin merely from the disaffection of the part, and not from the peccancy of the humours. Wifem.
PECCANT. adj. [peccant, Fr. peccant, Latin.]
1. Guilty; criminal.

From them I will not hide
My judgments, how with mankind I proceed;
As how with peccant angels late they saw. Milton.
That such a peccant creature should disapprove and repent of every violation of the rules of just and honest, this right reason could not but infer. South's Sermons.
2. Ill disposed; corrupt; bad; offensive to the body; injurious to health. It is chiefly used in medical writers.
With laxatives preserve your body found, Dryden.
Such as have the bile peccant or deficient are relieved by bitters, which are a sort of subsidiary gall. Arbuthnot.
3. Wrong; bad; deficient; uniformal.
Nor is the party cited bound to appear, if the citation be peccant in form or matter. Ayliffe's Parergon.

PECK. n. f. [from pecca, or perhaps from pac, a vessel. Skinner.
1. The fourth part of a bushel.
Burn our vessels, like a new Seal'd peck or bushel, for being true. Hudibras.
To every hill of ashes, some put a peck of unlacked lime, which they cover with the ashes till rain slacks the lime, and then they spread them. Mortimer's Husbandry.
He drove about his turnips in a cart;
And from the same machine fold pecks of peas. King.
2. Proverbially. [In low language.] A great deal.
Her finger was so small, the ring
Would not stay on which they did bring;
It was too wide a peck;
It look'd like the great collar just About our young colt's neck. Suckling.

To PECK. v. a. [becquer, French; picken, Dutch.]
1. To strike with the beak as a bird.
2. To pick up food with the beak.
She was his only joy, and he her pride,
She, when he walk'd, went pecking by his side. Dryden.
Can any thing be more surprising, than to consider Cicero observing, with a religious attention, after what manner the chickens pecked the grains of corn thrown them. Addison.
3. To strike with any pointed instrument.
With a pick-axe of iron about sixteen inches long, sharpened at the one end to peck, and flat headed at the other to drive little iron wedges to cleave rocks. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
4. To strike; to make blows.
Two contrary factions, both inveterate enemies of our church, which they are perpetually pecking and striking at with the same malice. South's Sermons.
They will make head against a common enemy, whereas mankind lie pecking at one another, till they are torn to pieces. L'Estrange.

5. The following passage is perhaps more properly written to peck, to throw.
Get up o' th' rail, I'll peck you o'er the pales else. Shakespeare.
PECKER. n. f. [from peck.]
1. One that pecks.
2. A kind of bird: as, the wood-pecker.
The titmouse and the peckers hungry brood,
And Progne with her bosom stain'd in blood. Dryden.

PECKLED. adj. [corrupted from speckled.] Spotted; varied with spots.
Some are peckled, some greenish. Walton's Angler.
PECTINAL. n. f. [from pecten, Lat. a comb.]
There are other fishes whose eyes regard the heavens, as plain and cartilaginous fishes, as pectinals, or such as have their bones made laterally like a comb. Brown.
PECTINATED. adj. [from pecten.] Put one within another alternately. This seems to be the meaning.
To fit cross leg'd or with our fingers pectinated, is accounted bad. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PECTINATION. n. f. The state of being pectinated.
The complication or pectination of the fingers was an hieroglyphic of impediment. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PECTORAL. adj. [from pectoralis, Latin.] Belonging to the breast.
Being troubled with a cough, pectorals were prescribed, and he was thereby relieved. Wifeman.

PECTORAL. n. f. [pectoralis, Lat. pectoralis, Fr.] A breast plate.
PECULATE. n. f. [peculatus, Latin; peculat, Fr.] Robbery.
PECULATION. n. f. of the publick; theft of publick money.
PECULATOR. [Latin.] Robber of the publick.
PECULIAR. adj. [peculiaris, from peculum, Lat. pecule, Fr.]

1. Appropriate; belonging to any one with exclusion of others.
I agree with Sir William Temple, that the word humour is peculiar to our English tongue; but not that the thing itself is peculiar to the English, because the contrary may be found in many Spanish, Italian and French productions. Swift.
2. Not common to other things.

PED

The only sacred hymns they are that christianity hath peculiar unto itself, the other being songs too of praise and of thanksgiving, but songs wherewith as we serve God, so the Jews likewise. Hosiers b. v. f. 39.

Space and duration being ideas that have something very abstruse and peculiar in their nature, the comparing them one with another may be of use for their illustration. Locke.
3. Particular; single. To join most with peculiar, though found in Dryden, is improper.

One peculiar nation to select From all the rest, of whom to be invok'd. Milton.
I neither fear, nor will provoke the war;
My fate is Juno's most peculiar care. Dryden.

PECULIAR. n. f.
1. The property; the exclusive property.
By tincture or reflection, they augment Their small peculiar. Milt. Par. Lost.
Revenge is so absolutely the peculiar of heaven, that no consideration whatever can empower even the best men to assume the execution of it. South's Sermons.

2. Something absconded from the ordinary jurisdiction.
Certain peculiar there are, some appertaining to the dignities of the cathedral church at Exon. Carew.
PECULIARITY. n. f. [from peculiar.] Particularity; something found only in one.

If an author possessed any distinguishing marks of style or peculiarity of thinking, there would remain in his least successful writings some few tokens whereby to discover him. Swift.
PECULIARLY. adv. [from peculiar.]
1. Particularly; singly.

That is peculiarly the effect of the sun's variation. Woodw.
2. In a manner not common to others.

PECUNIARY. adj. [pecuniarius, from pecunia, Lat. pecuniare, Fr.]
1. Relating to money.
Their impostures delude not only unto pecuniary defractions, but the irreparable deceit of death. Brown.

2. Consisting of money.
Pain of infamy is a severer punishment upon ingenious natures than a pecuniary mulct. Bacon.
The injured person might take a pecuniary mulct by way of atonement. Brown.

PED. n. f.
1. A small packfaddle. A ped is much shorter than a pannel, and is raised before and behind, and serves for small burdens. Tusser.
2. A basket; a hamper.
A hark is a wicker ped, wherein they use to carry fish. Spens.

PEDAGOGICAL. adj. [from pedagogue.] Suited or belonging to a schoolmaster.
PEDAGOGUE. n. f. [pedagogus, Lat. παιδαγωγός, pai; and γωγός.] One who teaches boys; a schoolmaster; a pedant.
Few pedagogues but curse the barren chaff,
Like him who hang'd himself for mere despair. Dryden.

A pedagogue. v. a. [παιδαγωγέω, from the noun.] To teach with superciliousness.
This may confine their younger stiles,
Whom Dryden pedagogues at Will's;
But never could be meant to tie
Authentic wits, like you and I. Prior.

PE'DAGOGY. n. f. [παιδαγωγία.] The mastership; discipline.
In time the reason of men ripening to such a pitch, as to be above the pedagogy of Moses's rod and the discipline of types, God thought fit to display the substance without the shadow. South's Sermons.

PE'DAL. adj. [pedalis, Lat.] Belonging to a foot. Diät.
PE'DALS. n. f. [pedalis, Lat. pedales, Fr.] The large pipes of an organ: so called because played upon and stooped with the foot. Diät.

PE'DANEUS. adj. [pedaneus, Lat.] Going on foot. Diät.
PEDANT. n. f. [pedant, French.]
1. A schoolmaster.
A pedant that keeps a school i' th' church. Shakespeare.
The boy who scarce has paid his entrance down
To his proud pedant, or declin'd a noun. Dryden.

2. A man vain of low knowledge; a man awkwardly ostentatious of his literature.
The pedant can hear nothing but in favour of the conceits he is amorous of. Glanville.
The preface has so much of the pedant, and so little of the conversation of men in it, that I shall pass it over. Addison.

In learning let a nymph delight,
The pedant gets a mistress by't. Swift.
PEDANTIC. adj. [pedantique, Fr. from pedant.] Awkwardly ostentatious of learning.

Mr. Cheeke had eloquence in the Latin and Greek tongues; but for other sufficiencies pedantick enough. Hayward.
When we see any thing in an old fayrist, that looks forced and pedantick, we ought to consider how it appeared in the time the poet wrote.

The obscurity is brought over them by ignorance and age, made yet more obscure by their pedantical elucidators. Felton.
A spirit

PEE

A spirit of contradiction is so pedantic and hateful, that a man should watch against every instance of it. Watts.
We now believe the Copernican system; yet we shall still use the popular terms of sun-rise and sun-set, and not introduce a new pedantick description of them from the motion of the earth. Bentley's Sermons.

PEDANTICALLY. adv. [from pedantical.] With awkward ostentation of literature.
The earl of Roscommon has excellently rendered it; too faithfully is, indeed, pedantically; 'tis a faith like that, which proceeds from superstition. Dryden.

PE'DANTRY. n. f. [pedanterie, Fr.] Awkward ostentation of needless learning.
'Tis a practice that favours much of pedantry; a reserve of penitency we have not shaken off from school. Brown.
Horace has enticed me into this pedantry of quotation. Cowley.
Make us believe it, if you can: it is in Latin, if I may be allowed the pedantry of a quotation, non persuadebis, etiamsi persuaseris.

From the universities the young nobility are sent for fear of contracting any airs of pedantry by a college education. Swift.
To PE'DDLE. v. n. To be busy about trifles. Amf. It is commonly written peddle: as, what peddling work is here.

PE'DERERO. n. f. [pederera, Spanish, from pedras, a stone with which they charged it.] A small cannon managed by a swivel. It is frequently written paterera.

PE'DESTAL. n. f. [pedestal, Fr.] The lower member of a pillar; the basis of a statue.
The poet bawls pedestal. Dryden.
In the centre of it was a grim idol; the forefront of the pedestal was curiously embossed with a triumph. Addison.

So stiff, so mute! some statue you would swear
Step from its pedestal to take the air. Pope.
PE'DESTRIUS. adj. [pedestris, Latin.] Not winged; going on foot.

Men conceive they never lie down, and enjoy not the position of rest, ordained unto all pedestrian animals. Brown.
PE'DICLE. n. f. [from pedis, Lat. pediculus, Fr.] The footstalk, that by which a leaf or fruit is fixed to the tree.

The cause of the holding green, is the close and compact substance of their leaves and pedicles. Bacon.
PE'DICULAR. adj. [pedicularis, Lat. pediculare, Fr.] Having the phrygiads or lousy distemper.

PE'DIGREE. n. f. [perre and degre, Skinner.] Genealogy; lineage; account of descent.
I am no herald to enquire of men's pedigrees, it sufficeth me if I know their virtues. Sidney.

You tell a pedigree
Of threefold and two years, a filly time. Shakespeare.
Alterations of surnames, which in former ages have been very common, have obscured the truth of our pedigrees, that it will be no little hard labour to deduce many of them. Cam.

To the old heroes hence was giv'n
A pedigree which reach'd to heav'n. Waller.
The Jews preserved the pedigrees of their several tribes, with a more scrupulous exactness than any other nation. Atter.

PE'DIMENT. n. f. [pedis, Lat.] In architecture, an ornament that crowns the ordonances, finishes the fronts of buildings, and serves as a decoration over gates, windows and niches: it is ordinarily of a triangular form, but sometimes makes the arch of a circle. Diät.

PE'DLER. n. f. [a petty dealer; a contraction produced by frequent use.] One who travels the country with small commodities.
All as a poor pedler he did wend,
Bearing a truffle of trifles at his back;
As bails and babies and glasses in his pack. Spenser.

If you did but hear the pedler at the door, you would never dance again after a tabor and pipe. Shakespeare.
He is wit's pedler, and retails his wares
At wakes and wassals, meetings, markets, fairs. Shakespeare.
Had fly Ulysses at the sack
Of Troy brought thee his pedler's pack. Cleaveland.

A narrow education may beget among some of the clergy in possession such contempt for all innovators, as merchants have for pedlers. Swift.
Atlas was so exceeding strong,
He bore the skies upon his back;
Just as a pedler does his pack. Swift.

PE'DLERY. adj. [from pedler.] Wares sold by pedlers.
The sufferings of those of my rank are trifles in comparison of what all those who travel with fish, poultry, pedlery ware to sell. Swift.

PE'DDLING. adj. Petty dealing; such as pedlers have.
So slight a pleasure I may part with, and find no mis; this peddling profit I may resign, and 'twill be no breach in my estate. Deacy of Pity.

PE'DOBAPTISM. n. f. [παιδός and βαπτισμός.] Infant baptism. Diät.
PE'DOBAPTIST. n. f. [παιδός and βαπτιστής.] One that holds or practises infant baptism.

PEE

To PEE. v. a. [pisser, Fr. from pellis.]
1. To decorate; to flay.
The skilful shepherd peel'd me certain wands, Shakespeare.
And stuck them up before the fulsome ewes.

2. [From pillers, to rob.] To plunder. According to analogy this should be written pill.
Who once just and temperate conquer'd well,
But govern ill the nations under yoke,
Peeling their provinces, exhausted all
But lust and rapine. Milton's Paradise Regained.

Lord-like at ease, with arbitrary pow'r,
To peel the chiefs, the people to devour;
These, traitor, are thy talents. Dryden.

PEEL. n. f. [pellis, Latin; pelure, French.] The skin or thin rind of any thing.

PEEL. n. f. [paelle, Fr.] A broad thin board with a long handle, used by bakers to put their bread in and out of the oven.

PEELER. n. f. [from peel.]
1. One who strips or flays.
2. A robber; a plunderer.

Yet otes with her fucking a peeler is found, Both ill to the master and worse to some ground. Tusser.

As 'tis a peeler of land, sow it upon lands that are rank. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To PEEP. v. n. [This word has no etymology, except that of Skinner, who derives it from opheffen, Dutch, to lift up; and of Casaubon, who derives it from οφειναι, a spy; perhaps it may come from pip, pipis, Latin, to cry as young birds; when the chickens first broke the shell and cried, they were said to begin to pip or peep; and the word that expressed the act of crying, was by mistake applied to the act of appearing that was at the same time: this is offered till something better may be found.]
1. To make the first appearance.
She her gay painted plumes disordered, Seeing at last herself from danger rid,
Peeps forth and soon renews her native pride. Ed. Queen.

Your youth
And the true blood, which peeps forth fairly through it,
Do plainly give you out an untain'd shepherd. Shakespeare.
England and France might through their amity,
Breed him some prejudice; for from this league,
Peep'd harms that menac'd him. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.

I can see his pride
Peep through each part of him. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.
The tin'rous maiden-blossoms on each bough
Peep forth from their first blushes; so that now
A thousand ruddy hopes smil'd in each bud;
And flatter'd every greedy eye that stood. Crashaw.

With words not hers, and more than human found,
She makes th' obedient ghosts peep trembling through the ground. Roscommon.

Earth, but not at once, her visage rears;
And peeps upon the seas from upper grounds. Dryden.
Fair as the face of nature did appear,
When flowers first peep'd, and trees did blossoms bear, }
And winter had not yet deform'd th' inverted year. Dryd.
Printing and letters had just peeped abroad in the world;
and the reformers of learning wrote very eagerly against one another. Atterbury.

Though but the very white end of the sprout peep out in the outward part of the couch, break it open, you will find the sprout of a greater largeness. Mortimer's Husbandry.
So pleas'd at first the tow'ring Alps we try,
And the first clouds and mountains seem the last;
But those attain'd, we tremble to survey
The growing labours of the lengthen'd way;
Th' increasing prospect tires our wand'ring eyes,
Hills peep o'er hills, and Alps on Alps arise. Pope.

Molt souls but peep out once an age,
Dull fallen prisoners in the body's cage. Pope.
2. To look slyly, closely or curiously; to look through any crevice.

Who is the fame, which at my window peeps. Spenser.
Come thick night!
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes;
Nor heav'n peep through the blanket of the dark,
To cry hold. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

Nature hath fram'd strange fellows in her time;
Some that will evermore peep through their eyes,
And laugh like parrots at a bag-piper. Shakespeare.
A fool will peep in at the door. Ecclus. xxi. 23.

The trembling leaves through which he play'd,
Dappling the walk with light and shade,
Like lattice-windows give the spy
Room but to peep with half an eye. Cleaveland.

All doors are shut, no servant peeps abroad,
While others outward went on quick dispatch. Dryden.

PEE

The daring flames peep in, and faw from far
The awful beauties of the sacred quire;
But since it was prophand by civil war,
Heav'n thought it fit to have it purg'd by fire. Dryden.

From each tree
The feather'd people look down to peep on me. Dryden.
Those remote and vast bodies were formed not merely to be peep at through an optick glass. Bentley's Sermons.
O my muse, just distance keep;
Thou art a maid, and must not peep. Prior.
In vain his little children peeping out Into the mingling storm, demand their fire. Thomson.

PEEP. n. f.
1. First appearance: as, at the peep and first break of day.
2. A fly look.
Would not one think, the almanackmaker was crept out of his grave to take t'other peep at the stars. Swift.

PEEPER. n. f. Young chickens just breaking the shell.
Dishes I chuse, though little, yet genteel;
Snails the first course, and peepers crown the meal. Bransf.

PEEPHOLE. n. f. [peep and hole.] Hole through which PEEPINGHOLE. n. f. one may look without being discovered.
By the peephole in his crest,
Is it not virtuously confest,
That those his eyes took distant aim. Prior.
The fox spied him through a peepinghole he had found out to see what news. L'Estrange.

PEER. n. f. [pair, French.]
1. Equal; one of the same rank.
His peers upon this evidence
Have found him guilty of high treason. Shakefp.
Amongst a man's peers, a man shall be sure of familiarity;
and therefore it is good a little to keep state. Bacon.
Oh! what is man, great maker of mankind!
That thou to him so great respect do't bear!
That thou admitt'st him with so peevish a mind,
Mak'st him a king, and ev'n an angel's peer. Davies.

2. One equal in excellence or endowments.
In song he never had his peer,
From sweet Cecilia down to chanticleer. Dryden.

3. Companion: fellow.
He all his peers in beauty did surpass. Fairy Queen.
If you did move to-night,
In the dances, with what spight
Of your peers you were beheld, Benj. Johnson.
Who bear the bows were knights in Arthur's reign,
Twelve they, and twelve the peers of Charlemagne. Dryd.

4. A nobleman: of nobility we have five degrees, who are all nevertheless called peers, because their effential privileges are the same.
I see thee compass't with thy kingdom's peers,
That speak my salutation in their minds;
Hail king of Scotland! Shakefp. Macbeth.
King Henry's peers and chief nobility Destroy'd themselves, and lost the realm of France. Shakefp.
Be just in all you say, and all you do;
Whatever be your birth, you're sure to be A peer of the first magnitude to me. Dryden.

To PEER. v. n. [By contraction from appear.]
1. To come just in sight.
As the sun breaks through the darkest clouds,
So honour peereth in the meanest habit. Shakefp.
Yet a many of your horsemen peer,
And gallop o'er the field. Shakefp. Henry V.
Ev'n through the hollow eyes of death
I spy life peering. Shakefp.
See how his gorget peers above his gown,
To tell the people in what danger he was. Ben. Johnson.
Hell itself will pass away,
And leave her dolorous mansion to the peering day. Milt.

2. To look narrowly; to peep.
Now for a clod-like hare in form they peer,
Now bolt and cudgel squirrels leap do move,
Now the ambitious lark with mirror clear
They catch, while he, fool! to himself makes love. Sidu.
Peering in maps for ports, and peers, and roads,
And every object that might make me fear Misfortune to my ventures. Shakefp. Merch. of Venice.

PEERAGE. n. f. [pair, Fr. from peer.]
1. The dignity of a peer.
His friendships he to few confin'd;
No fools of rank or mongrel breed,
Who fain would pass for Lords in need;
Where titles give no right or power,
And peerage is a wither'd flower. Swift.

2. The body of peers.
Not only the penal laws are in force against papists, and their number is contemptible, but also the peerage and commons are excluded from parliament. Dryden.

PEERDOM. n. f. [from peer.] Peerage. Ansforth.

PEERLESS. n. f. [female of peer.] The lady of a peer; a woman ennobled.

PEG

Statesman and patriot ply alike the stocks;
Peevy and butler share alike the box. Pope.

PEERLESS. adj. [from peer.] Unequalled; having no peer.
I bid,
On pain of punishment, the world to weat,
We stand up peerless. Shakefp.

You,
So perfect, and so peerless, are created
Of every creature's best. Shakefp. Temp.
Her peerless feature, joined with her birth,
Approves her fit for none, but for a king. Shakefp.

Hesperus, that led
The starry host, rode brightest; till the moon,
Rising in clouded majesty, yatl length,
Apparent queen, unveil'd her peerless light. Milton.

Such music worthiest were to blaze
The peerless light of her immortal praise, Whole lute leads us. Milton.

Her dress, her shape, her matchless grace,
Were all observ'd, as well as heav'nly face;
With such a peerless majesty the stands,
As in that day she took the crown. Dryden.

PEERLESSNESS. n. f. [from peerless.] Universal superiority.
PEEVISH. adj. [This word peevish, with more reason than he commonly discovers, supposes to be formed by corruption from perverse; Skinner rather derives it from peevish, as we lay peevish.] Petulant; waspish; easily offended; irascible; irascible; soon angry; perverse; morose; querulous; full of expressions of discontent; hard to please.
For what can breed more peevish incongruities,
Than man to yield to female lamentations. Sidney.

She is peevish, fullen, froward,
Proud, disobedient, stubborn, lacking duty. Shakefp.
If thou hast the metal of a king,
Being wrong'd as we are by this peevish town,
Turn thou the mouth of thy artillery,
As we will ours, against these faucy walls. Shakefp.

I will not presume
To send such peevish tokens to a king. Shakefp.
Those deserve to be doubly laugh'd at, that are peevish and angry for nothing to no purpose. L'Estrange.

Neither will it be satire or peevish invective to affirm, that infidelity and vice are not much diminished. Swift.

PEEVISHLY. adv. [from peevish.] Angrily; querulously; morosely.
He was so peevishly opiniative and proud, that he would rather ask nor hear the advice of any. Hayward.

PEEVISHNESS. n. f. [from peevish.] Irascibility; querulous-ness; fretfulness; perverseness.
Some miscarriages in government might escape through the peevishness of others, envying the publick should be managed without them. King Charles.

It will be an unpardonable, as well as childish peevishness, if we undervalue the advantages of our knowledge, and neglect to improve it. Locke.

You may find
Nothing but acid left behind:
From passion you may then be freed,
When peevishness and spleen succeed. Swift.

PEG. n. f. [pegge, Teutonic.]
1. A piece of wood driven into a hole, which does the office of an iron nail.
Solid bodies foretew rain; as boxes and pegs of wood,
when they draw and wind hard. Bacon.
The teeth are about thirty in each jaw; all of them elav-iculates or peg teeth, not much unlike the tusks of a masti-
f. Grew's Anatomy.

If he pretends to be choleric, we shall treat him like his little friend Dicky, and hang him upon a peg till he comes to himself. Addison's Guardian, N° 108.

The peg; and nails in a great building, though they are but little valued in themselves, are absolutely necessary to keep the whole frame together. Addison's Spectator.

A finer petticoat can neither make you richer, more vir-tuous or wife, than if it hung upon a peg. Swift.

2. The pins of an instrument in which the strings are strained.
You are well tun'd now; but I'll let down
The peg that make this music. Shakefp. Othello.

3. To take a PEG lower; to depress; to sink: perhaps from relaxing the cords of musical instruments.
Remember how in arms and politics,
We still have worsted all your holy tricks,
Trepann'd your party with intrigue, Hudibras.
And took your grandees down a peg.

4. The nickname of Margaret.
To PEG. v. a. To fatten with a peg.
I will rend an oak,
And peg thee in his knotty entrails, 'till Thou'lt howl'd away twelve winters. Shakefp. Temp.
Taking the flocks of the past spring, and pegging them down in very rich earth, by that time twelvemonth they will be ready to remove. Evelyn's Calendar.

PEL

PELF. n. f. [In low Latin, peltria, not known whence derived;
peltria, in Norman, is frumpy.] Money; riches.
The thought of this doth pass all worldly pel. Sidney.

Hardy elf,
Thou darest view my direful countenance,
I read thee rash and heedless of thyself,
To trouble my still feat and heaps of precious pel. Fairy Queen.

Immortal gods, I crave no pel;
I pray for no man but myself;
He call'd his money in;
But the prevailing love of pel
Soon split him on the former shelf:
He put it out again. Dryden's Horace.

To the poor if he refus'd his pel,
He us'd them full as kindly as himself. Swift.

PELICAN. n. f. [pelicanus, low Lat. pellican, Fr.]
There are two sorts of pelicans; one lives upon the water and feeds upon fish; the other keeps in deserts, and feeds upon serpents and other reptiles: the pelican has a peculiar tenderness for its young; it generally places its nest upon a craggy rock: the pelican is supposed to admit its young to suck blood from its breast. Cabnet.

Should discarded fathers
Have this little mercy on their flesh;
'Twas this flesh begot those pelican daughters. Shakefp.
The pelican hath a beak broad and flat, like the slice of apothecaries. Shakefp. on Providence.

PELLET. n. f. [from pila, Lat. pellets, Fr.]
1. A little ball.
That which is sold to the merchants, is made into little pellets, and sealed. Sandys.
I dressed with little pellets of lint. Wifeman's Surgery.

2. A bullet; a ball.
The force of gunpowder hath been ascribed to rarefaction of the earthy substance into flame, and so followeth a dilatation; and therefore, left two bodies should be in one place, there must needs also follow an expulsion of the pellet or blowing up of the mine: but these are ignorant speculations; for flame, if there were nothing else, will be suffocated with any hard body, such as a pellet is, or the barrel of a gun; so as the hard body would kill the flame. Bacon.

A cube or pellet of yellow wax as much as half the spirit of wine, burnt only eighty-seven pulses. Bacon.
How shall they reach us in the air with those pellets they can hardly roll upon the ground. L'Estrange.

In a shooting trunk, the longer it is to a certain limit, the more forcibly the air passes and drives the pellet. Ray.

PELLETED. adj. [from pellet.] Consisting of bullets.
My brave Egyptians all,
By the discarding of this pelleted storm, Shakefp. Lear.
Lie graveless. Shakefp. Lear.

PELLE. n. f. [pellis, Lat.]
1. A thin skin.
After the discharge of the fluid, the pellis must be broke.
Sharp's Surgery.

2. It is often used for the film which gathers upon liquors impregnated with salts or other substances, and evaporated by heat.
PELLITORY. n. f. [parietaria, Lat.] An herb.
The pellitory hath an apetalous flower, whose flower cup is divided into four parts, which is sometimes bell-shaped like a funnel, with four stamina or threads surrounding the pointal, which becomes for the most part an oblong feed, surrounded by the flower cup; to which may be added, the flowers are produced from the wings of the leaves. Miller.

PELLMELL. n. f. [pelles miste, Fr.] Confusedly; tumultuously;
one among another.
When we have dash'd them to the ground,
Then defie each other; and pell mell
Make work upon ourselves. Shakefp. King John.

Never yet did insurrection want
Such moody beggars, starving for a time
Of pellmell havock and confusion.
He knew when to fall on pellmell,
To fall back and retreat as well. Henry IV.

PELLS. n. f. [pellis, Lat.]
Clerk of the pelles, an officer belonging to the exchequer, who enters every teller's bill into a parchment roll called pelles
negotiorum, the roll of receipts; and also makes another roll called pelles exituum, a roll of the disbursements. Bailey.

PELLUCID. adj. [pellucidus, Lat.] Clear; transparent; not opaque; not dark.
The colours are owing to the intermixture of foreign matter with the proper matter of the stone: this is the case of agates and other coloured stones, the colours of several whereof may be extracted, and the bodies rendered as pellucid as crystal, without sensibly damaging the texture. Hoadward.
If water be made warm in any pellucid vessel emptied of air, the water in the vacuum will bubble and boil as vehement as it would in the open air in a vessel set upon the fire, till it conceives a much greater heat. Newton's Opticks.

PEN

PELLUCIDITY. n. f. [from pellucid.] Transparency; clear-
PELLUCIDNESS. n. f. nefs; not opacity.
The air is a clear and pellucid menstruum, in which the insensible particles of dissolved matter float, without troubling the pellucidity of the air; when on a sudden by a precipitation they gather into visible misty drops that make clouds. Locke.

We consider their pellucidness and the vast quantity of light, that passes through them without reflection. Keil.

PELT. n. f. [from pellis, Lat.]
1. Skin; hide.
The camels hair is taken for the skin or pelt with the hair upon it. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
A scabby tetter on their pelts will stick;
When the raw rain has pierc'd them to the quick. Dryden.

2. The quarry of a hawk all torn. Ansforth.

PELT-MONGER. n. f. [pellis, Lat. pelt and monger.] A dealer in raw hides.
To PELT. v. a. [peltern, German, Skinner; contracted from pellet, Mr. Lye.] It is generally used of something thrown, rather with teasing frequency than destructive violence.

1. To strike with something thrown.
Poor naked wretches whereof'er you are
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm!
How shall your houseless heads and unfed sides,
Your loop'd and window'd raggedness defend you. Shakefp.
Do but stand upon the foaming shore,
The chiding billows seem to pelt the clouds. Shakefp.
No zealous brother there would want a stone
To maul us cardinals, and pelt pope Joan. Dryden.
Obscure persons have insulted men of great worth, and pelted them from coverts with little objections. Atterbury.
The whole empire could hardly subdue me, and I might easily with stones pelt the metropolis to pieces. Gulliver.

2. To throw; to cast.
My Phillis me with pelted apples plies,
Then tripping to the woods the wanton hies. Dryden.

PELTING. adj. This word in Shakefp. signifies, I know not why, mean; paltry; pitiful.
Could great men thunder, Jove could ne'er be quiet;
For every pelting petty officer
Would use his heav'n for thunder. Shakefp. Lear.

Fogs falling in the land,
Have every pelting river made so proud,
That they have overborn their continents. Shakefp.
They from theepcoats and poor pelting villages Enforce their charity. Shakefp.
A tenement or pelting farm. Shakefp.

PELVIS. n. f. [Latin.] The lower part of the belly.
PEN. n. f. [penna, Latin.]
1. An instrument of writing.
Never durst poet touch a pen to write,
Until his ink were temper'd with love's sighs. Shakefp.

Eternal deities!
Who write whatever time shall bring to pass,
With pens of Adamant on plates of brass. Dryden.
He takes the papers, lays them down again;
And, with unwilling fingers, tries the pen. Dryden.
I can, by designing the letters, tell what new idea it shall exhibit the next moment, barely by drawing my pen over it, which will neither appear, if my hands stand still; or though I move my pen, if my eyes be shut. Locke.

2. Feather.
The pens that did his pinnions bind,
Were like main-yards with flying canvas lin'd. Fairy Queen.

3. Wing; though even here it may mean feather.
Feather'd soon and fledg'd,
They summ'd their pens; and soaring th' air sublime,
With clang despis'd the ground. Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. [From pennan, Saxon.] A small inclosure; a coop.
My father stole two geese out of a pen. Shakefp.
The cook was ordered to dress capons for supper, and take the best in the pen. L'Estrange.
She in pens his flocks will fold. Dryden's Horace.
Ducks in thy ponds, and chickens in thy pens,
And be thy turkeys num'rous as thy hens. King.

The gather'd flocks
Are in the wattled pen innumerable prest'd, Head above head. Thomson's Summer.

To PEN. v. a. [pennan and pinban, Saxon.]
1. To coop; to shut up; to incage; to imprison in a narrow place.
Away with her,
And pen her up. Shakefp. Cymbeline.

My heavy son
Private in his chamber pens himself. Shakefp.
The plaister alone would pen the humour already contained in the part, and forbid new humour. Bacon.

As when a prowling wolf,
Whom hunger drives to seek new haunt for prey,
Watching where shepherds pen their flocks at eve

The faithful pencil has design'd
Some bright idea of the matter's mind,
Where a new world leaps out at his command,
And ready nature waits upon his hand. Pope.
One dips the pencil, t'other strings the lyre. Pope.

2. A black lead pen, with which cut to a point they write without ink.

Mark with a pen or pencil the most considerable things in the books you desire to remember. Watts.

3. Any instrument of writing without ink.
To PE'NCIL. v. n. [from the noun.] To paint.

Painting is almost the natural man;
For since dishonour trafficks with man's nature,
He is but outside: pencil'd figures are Ev'n such as they give out. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.

PENDANT. n. f. [pendant, French.]

1. A jewel hanging in the ear.
The joints
Some third the mazy ringlets of her hair,
Some hang upon the pendents of her ear. Pope.

2. Any thing hanging by way of ornament.
Unripe fruit, whose verdant stalks do cleave
Close to the tree, which grieves no less to leave
The smiling pendant which adorns her so,
And until Autumn, on the bough should grow. Waller.

3. A pendulum. Obsolete.
To make the same pendant go twice as fast as it did, or make every undulation of it in half the time it did, make the line, at which it hangs, double in geometrical proportion to the line at which it hang before. Digby on the Soul.

4. A small flag in ships.
PENDENCE. n. f. [from pendere, Lat.] Slopeness; inclination.

The Italians give the cover a graceful pendence or slope-ness, dividing the whole breadth into nine parts, whereof two shall serve for the elevation of the highest top or ridge from the lowest. Watson's Architecture.

PENDENCY. n. f. [from pendere, Lat.] Sulpens; delay of decision.

The judge shall pronounce in the principal cause, nor can the appellat allege pendency of suit. Ayliffe.

PENDENT. adj. [pendens, Latin; some write pendant, from the French.]

1. Hanging.
Quaint in green she shall be loose enrob'd
With ribbons pendant, flaring 'bout her head. Shakef.

I sometimes mournful verse indite, and sing
Of desperate lady near a purling stream,
Or lover pendent on a willow tree. Phillips.

2. Jutting over.
A pendent rock,
A forked mountain, or blue promontory
With trees upon't, that nod unto the world,
And mock our eyes with air. Shakef.

3. Supported above the ground.
They brought, by wondrous art
Pontifical, a ridge of pendent rock
Over the vex'd abyss. Milton's Paradise Lost.

PENDING. n. f. [pendente lite.] Depending; remaining yet undecided.

A person pending suit with the diocesan, shall be defended in the possession. Ayliffe.

PENDULOSITY. n. f. [from pendulous.] The state of hanging; suspension.

His slender legs he encreased by riding, that is, the humour descended upon their pendulosity, having no support or suppedaneous stability. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PENDULOUS. adj. [pendulus, Lat.] Hanging; not supported below.

All the plagues, that in the pendulous air
Hang fatal o'er men's faults, light on thy daughters. Shak.

Bellerophon's horse, fram'd of iron, and placed between two loadstones with wings expanded, hung pendulous in the air. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The grinders are furnished with three roots, and in the upper jaw often four, because these are pendulous. Rap.

PENDULUM. n. f. [pendulus, Lat. pendule, Fr.] Any weight hung so as that it may easily swing backwards and forwards, of which the great law is, that its oscillations are always performed in equal time.

Upon the bench I will to handle 'em,
That the vibration of this pendulum
Shall make all taylor's yards of one Unanimous opinion. Hudibras.

PENETRABLE. adj. [penetrabilis, Fr. penetrabilis, Latin.]

1. Such as may be pierced; such as may admit the entrance of another body.

Let him try thy dart,
And pierce his only penetrable part. Dryden.

2. Susceptive of moral or intellectual impression.
I am not made of stone,
But penetrable to your kind entreaties. Shakef.

Peace,
And let me wring your heart, for so I shall,
If it be made of penetrable stuff. Shakef. Hamlet.

PE'NETRABILITY. n. f. [from penetrabilis.] Susceptibility of impression from another body.

There being no mean between penetrability and impenetra-bility, passivity and activity, they being contrary; therefore the infinite rarefaction of the one quality is the position of its contrary. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

PE'NETRAL. n. f. [penetralis, Latin.] Interior parts. Not in use.

The heart resists purulent fumes, into whose penetrals to insinuate some time must be allowed. Harvey.

PE'NETRANCY. n. f. [from penetrans.] Power of entering or piercing.

The subtilty, activity and penetrancy of its effluvia no obstacle can stop or repel, but they will make their way through all bodies. Ray on the Creation.

PE'NETRANT. adj. [penetrant, Fr.] Having the power to pierce or enter; sharp; subtle.

If the operation of these salts be in convenient glasses promoted by warmth, the ascending steams may easily be caught and reduced into a penetrant spirit. Boyle.

The food, mingled with some dissolved juices, is evacuated into the intestines, where it is further subtilized and rendered so fluid and penetrant, that the finer part finds its way in the freight orifices of the lacteous veins. Ray.

TO PE'NETRATE. v. a. penetro, Lat. penetrare, Fr.]

1. To pierce; to enter beyond the surface; to make way into a body.

Marrow is, of all other oily substances, the most penetrating. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. To affect the mind.

3. To reach the meaning.

TO PE'NETRATE. v. n. To make way.

There shall we clearly see the uses of these things, which here were too subtle for us to penetrate. Ray.

If we reached no farther than metaphor, we rather fancy than know, and are not yet penetrated into the infide and reality of the thing. Locke.

PE'NETRATION. n. f. [penetration, Fr. from penetrare.]

1. The act of entering into any body.

It warms
The universe, and to each inward part
With gentle penetration though unseen Shoots invisible virtue even to the deep. Milton's Par. Lost.

2. Mental entrance into any thing abstruse.
A penetration into the abstruse difficulties and depths of modern algebra and fluxions, is not worth the labour of those who design either of the three learned professions. Watts.

3. Acuteness; sagacity.
The proudest admirer of his own parts might consult with others, though of inferior capacity and penetration. Watts.

PE'NETRATIVE. adj. [from penetrare.]

1. Piercing; sharp; subtle.

Let not air be too gross, nor too penetrative, nor subject to any foggy noisomeness from fens. Watson.

2. Acute; sagacious; discerning.
O thou, whose penetrative wisdom found
The fourth sea rocks and shelves, where thousands drown'd. Swift's Miscellanies.

3. Having the power to impress the mind.
Thy master thou with pleacht arms, bending down
His corrigible neck, his face subdu'd To penetrative flame. Shakespeare.

PE'NETRATIVENESS. n. f. [from penetrative.] The quality of being penetrative.

PENGUIN. n. f. [confer magellanicus, Latin.]

1. A bird. This bird was found with this name, as is supposed, by the first discoverers of America; and penguin signifying in Welsh a white head, and the head of this fowl being white, it has been imagined, that America was peopled from Wales; whence Hudibras:
British Indians nam'd from penguins.
Grew gives another account of the name, deriving it from penguin, Lat. fat; but is, I believe, mistaken.

The penguin is so called from his extraordinary fatness:
for though he be no higher than a large goose, yet he weighs sometimes sixteen pounds: his wings are extreme short and little, altogether useless for flight, but by the help whereof he swims very swiftly. Grew's Musæum.

2. A fruit.
The penguin is very common in the West Indies, where the juice of its fruit is often put into punch, being of a sharp acid flavour: there is also a wine made of the juice of this fruit, but it will not keep good long. Miller.

PENINSULA. n. f. [Lat. peninsula; peninsule, Fr.] A piece of land almost surrounded by the sea, but joined by a narrow neck to the main.

Afide of Millbrook lieth the peninsula of Inlwork, on whose neckland standeth an ancient house. Carew.

PE'NINSULATED. adj. [from peninsula.] Almost surrounded by water.

PENITENCE. n. f. [penitence, Fr. penitentia, Lat.] Repentance; sorrow for crimes; contrition for sin, with amendments of life or change of the affections.

Death is deferr'd, and penitence has room
To mitigate, if not reverse the doom. Dryden.

May penitence fly round thy mournful bed,
And wing thy latest prayer to pitying heav'n. Irene.

PENITENT. adj. [penitent, Fr. penitens, Lat.] Repentant; contrite for sin; sorrowful for past transgressions, and resolutely amending life.

Much it joys me
To see you become to penitent. Shakespeare.

Give me
The penitent instrument to pick that bolt. Shakespeare.

Nor in the land of their captivity
Humbled themselves, or penitent besought
The God of their forefathers. Milton's Par. Regain'd.

Provoking God to raise them enemies;
From whom as oft he saves them penitent. Milton.

The proud he tam'd, the penitent he cheer'd,
Nor to rebuke the rich offender fear'd.
His preaching much, but more his practice wrought
A living sermon of the truths he taught. Dryden.

PE'NITENT. n. f.

1. One sorrowful for sin.
Concealed treasures shall be brought into use by the industry of converted penitents, whose carcasses the impartial laws shall dedicate to the worms of the earth. Bacon.

The repentance, which is formed by a grateful sense of the divine goodness towards him, is resolved on while all the appetites are in their strength: the penitent conquers the temptations of sin in their full force. Rogers's Sermons.

2. One under censures of the church, but admitted to penance.
The counterfeit Dionysius describes the practice of the church, that the catechumens and penitents were admitted to the lessons and palms, and then excluded. Stillington.

3. One under the direction of a confessor.

PENITENTIAL. adj. [from penitence.] Expressing penitence; enjoined as penance.

I have done penance for contemning love,
Whose high imperious thoughts have punish'd me
With bitter fasts and penitential groans. Shakespeare.

Is it not strange, that a rational man should adore leeks and garlick, and shed penitential tears at the smell of a delfed onion? South's Sermons.

PENITENTIAL. n. f. [penitenciel, Fr. penitentialis, low Latin.]

A book directing the degrees of penance.

The penitentials or book of penance contained such matters as related to the imposing of penance, and the reconciliation of the person that suffered penance. Ayliffe.

PENITENTIARY. n. f. [penitencier, Fr. penitentiarius, low
Latin.]

1. One who prescribes the rules and measures of penance.
Upon the loss of Urban, the duke's undoubted right, no penitentiary, though he had enjoined him never to straight penance to expiate his first offence, would have counselled him to have given over pursuit of his right, which he prosperously re-obtained. Bacon.

The great penitentiary with his counsellors prescribes the measure of penance. Ayliffe's Parergon.

2. A penitent; one who does penance.
A prison restrained John Northampton's liberty, who, for abusing the same in his unruly mayoralty of London, was condemned hither as a perpetual penitentiary. Carew.

PENNANT. n. f. [pennon, Fr.]
 1. A small flag, ensign or colours.
 2. A tackle for hoisting things on board.
PENNATED. adj. [pennatus, Latin.]
 1. Winged.
 2. Pennated, amongst botanists, are those leaves of plants as grow directly one against another on the same rib or stalk; as those of ash and walnut-tree.
PENNER. n. f. [from pen.]
 1. A writer.
 2. A pence. Ans. So it is called in Scotland.
PENNYLESS. adj. [from penny.] Moneyless; poor; wanting money.
PENNON. n. f. [pennon, Fr.] A small flag or colour.
 Her yellow locks crisped like golden wire,
 About her shoulders weren loosely fled,
 And when the wind amongst them did inspire,
 They waved like a pennon wide dispire.
Fairy Queen.
 Harry sweeps through our land
 With pennons painted in the blood of Harfleur.
Shakef.
 High on his pointed lance his pennon bore,
 His Cretan fight, the conquer'd Minotaur.
Dryden.
PENNY. n. f. plural pence. [pens, Saxon.]
 1. A small coin, of which twelve make a shilling: a penny is the radical denomination from which English coin is numbered, the copper halfpence and farthings being only nummorum famuli, a subordinate species of coin.
 She sighs and shakes her empty shoes in vain,
 No silver penny to reward her pain.
 One frugal on his birth-day fears to dine,
 Does at a penny's cost in herbs repine.
Dryden.
 2. Proverbially. A small sum.
 You shall hear
 The legions, now in Gallia, sooner landed
 In our not fearing Britain, than have tidings
 Of any penny tribute paid.
Shakef.
 We will not lend thee a penny.
Shakef.
 Because there is a latitude of gain in buying and selling, take not the utmost penny that is lawful, for although it be lawful, yet it is not safe.
Taylor's Living Holy.
 3. Money in general.
 Pepper and Sabean incense take;
 And with post-haste thy running markets make;
 Be sure to turn the penny.
Dryden.
 It may be a contrivance of some printer, who hath a mind to make a penny.
Swift's Miscellanies.
PENNYROYAL. n. f. [pulegium, Lat.]
Pennyroyal hath a labiated flower consisting of one leaf, whose upper lip or crest is entire, but the lower lip or beard is divided into three parts; out of the flower cup rises the point attended by four embryos, which afterwards become so many seeds: to which may be added, that the flowers grow in short thick whorles.
Miller.
PENNYWEIGHT. n. f. [penny and weight.] A weight containing twenty-four grains troy weight.
 The Sevil piece of Eight is 14 pennyweight in the pound worse than the English standard, weighs fourteen pennyweight, contains thirteen pennyweight, twenty-one grains and fifteen mites, of which there are twenty in the grain of sterling silver, and is in value forty-three English pence and eleven hundredths of a penny.
Arbutnot on Coins.
PENNYWISE. adj. [penny and wise.] One who saves small sums at the hazard of larger; one who is a niggard on improper occasions.
 Be not pennywise; riches have wings and fly away of themselves.
Bacon.
PENNYWORTH. n. f. [penny and worth.]
 1. As much as is bought for a penny.
 2. Any purchase; any thing bought or sold for money.
 As for corn it is nothing natural, save only for barley and oats, and some places for rye; and therefore the larger penny- worths may be allowed to them.
Spenser on Ireland.
 Pirates may make cheap pennyworths of their pillage.
 And purchase friends.
Shakef.
 You know I say nothing to him, for he hath neither Latin, French nor Italian, and you may come into court, and swear that I have a poor pennyworth of the English.
Shakef.
 Lucian affirms, that the souls of usurers after their death are translated into the bodies of asses, and there remain certain days for poor men to take their pennyworths out of their bones and sides by cudgel and spur.
Peacock.
 Though in purchases of church lands men have usually the cheapest pennyworths, yet they have not always the best bargains.
South's Sermons.
 3. Something advantageously bought; a purchase got for less than it is worth.
 For fame he pray'd, but let the event declare
 He had no mighty pennyworth of his pray'r.
Dryden.
 4. A small quantity.
 My friendship I distribute in pennyworths to those about me and who displease me least.
Swift.

PENSILE. adj. [pensilis, Latin.]
 1. Hanging; suspended.
 There are two trepidations; the one manifest and local, as of the bell when it is pensile; the other, secret of the minute parts.
 This ethereal space,
 Yielding to earth and sea the middle place,
 Anxious I ask you, how the pensile ball
 Should never drive to rise, nor never fear to fall.
Prior.
 2. Supported above the ground.
 The marble brought, erects the spacious dome,
 Or forms the pillars long-extended rows,
 On which the planted grove and pensile garden grows.
Prior.
PENSILENESS. n. f. [from pensile.] The state of hanging.
PENSION. n. f. [pension, Fr.] An allowance made to any one without an equivalent. In England it is generally understood to mean pay given to a state hireling for treason to his country.
 A charity bestowed on the education of her young subjects has more merit than a thousand pensions to those of a higher fortune.
Addison's Guardian, No 100.
 He has liv'd with the great without flattery, and been a friend to men in power without pensions.
Pope.
 To PENSION. v. a. [from the noun.] To support by an arbitrary allowance.
 One might expect to see medals of France in the highest perfection, when there is a society pensioned and set apart for the designing of them.
Addison on Ancient Medals.
 The hero William and the martyr Charles,
 One knighted Blackmore, and one pension'd Quarles.
Pope.
PENSIONARY. adj. [pensionnaire, French.] Maintained by pensions.
 Scorn his household policies,
 His silly plots and pensionary spies.
Dome.
 They were devoted by pensionary obligations to the olive.
Horval's Vocal Post.
PENSIONER. n. f. [from pension.]
 1. One who is supported by an allowance paid at the will of another; a dependant.
 Prices of things necessary for sustentation, grew excessive to the hurt of pensioners, soldiers, and all hired servants.
Cauid.
 Hovering dreams,
 The fickle pensioners of Morpheus' train.
Miller.
 The rector is maintained by the perquisites of the curate's office, and therefore is a kind of pensioner to him.
Collier.
 2. A slave of state hired by a stipend to obey his master.
 In Britain's senate he a feat obtains,
 And one more pensioner St. Stephen gains.
Pope.
PENSIVE. adj. [pensif, French; pensivo, Italian.]
 1. Sorrowfully thoughtful; forrowful; mournfully tedious; melancholy.
 Think it still a good work, which they in their pensive care for the well bestowing of time account waste.
Hooker.
 Are you at leisure, holy father,—
 —My leisure serves me, pensive daughter, now.
Shakef.
 Anxious cares the pensive nymph oppress,
 And secret passions labour'd in her breast.
Pope.
 2. It is generally and properly used of persons; but Prior has applied it to things.
 We at the sad approach of death shall know
 The truth, which from these pensive numbers flow,
 That we pursue false joy, and suffer real woe.
Prior.
PENSIVELY. adv. [from pensive.] With melancholy; forrowfully; with gloomy seriousness.
 So fair a lady did I spy,
 On herbs and flowers she walked pensively
 Mild, but yet love she proudly did forsake.
Spenser.
PENSIVENESS. n. f. [from pensive.] Melancholy; forrowfulness; gloomy seriousness.
 Concerning the blessings of God, whether they tend unto this life or the life to come, there is great cause why we should delight more in giving thanks than in making requests for them, inasmuch as the one hath pensiveness and fear, the other always joy annexed.
Hooker, b. v. f. 43.
 Wouldst thou unlock the door
 To cold despair and gnawing pensiveness.
Herbert.
PENT. part. pass. of pen. Shut up.
 Cut my lace asunder,
 That my pent heart may have some scope to beat.
Shakef.
 The son of Clarence have I pent up close.
Shakef.
 But with a grain a day, I would not buy
 Their mercy.
Shakef.
 Their armour help'd their harm, crush'd in, and bruise'd
 Into their substance pent.
Milton.
 The soul pure fire, like ours, of equal force;
 But pent in flesh, must issue by discourse.
Dryden.
Pent up in Utica he vainly forms
 A poor epitome of Roman greatness.
Addison's Cat.
PENTAPUSULAR. adj. [πεντα and pusular.] Having five cavities.
PENTACHORD. adj. [πεντα and χορδη.] An instrument with five strings.
PENTAEDROUS.

PEP

PENTAE'DROUS. adj. [πεντα and εδρα.] Having five sides.
 The pentae'drous columnar coralloid bodies are composed of plates set lengthways, and passing from the surface to the axis.
Woodward on Fossils.
PENTAGON. n. f. [pentagon, Fr. πεντα and γωνια.] A figure with five angles.
 I know of that famous piece at Capralora, cast by Baroccio into the form of a pentagon with a circle inscribed.
Watton.
PENTAGONAL. adj. [from pentagon.] Quinquangular; having five angles.
 The body being cut transversely, its surface appears like a net made up of pentagonal meshes, with a pentagonal star in each mesh.
Woodward on Fossils.
PENTAMETER. n. f. [pentametre, Fr. pentametre, Lat.] A Latin verse of five feet.
 Mr. Ditcham may possibly play some pentameters upon us, but he shall be answered in Alexandrines.
Addison.
PENTANGULAR. adj. [πεντα and γωνια.] Five cornered.
 His thick and bony scales stand in rows, so as to make the flesh almost pentangular.
Grev.
PENTAPETALOUS. adj. [πεντα and petala, Lat.] Having five petals.
PENTASTAST. adj. [πεντα and στασις.] An engine with five pulleys.
Dict.
PENTASTICK. n. f. [πεντα and στηξ.] A composition consisting of five verses.
PENTASTYLE. n. f. [πεντα and στυλη.] In architecture, a work in which are five rows of columns.
Dict.
PENTATEUCH. n. f. [πεντα and τευχος; pentateuque, Fr.] The five books of Moses.
 The author in the ensuing part of the pentateuch makes not unrequent mention of the angels.
Bentley.
PENTECOST. n. f. [πεντεςτη; pentecoste, Fr.] A feast among the Jews.
Pentecost signifies the fiftieth, because this feast was celebrated the fiftieth day after the sixteenth of Nisan, which was the second day of the feast of the passover: the Hebrews call it the feast of weeks, because it was kept seven weeks after the passover: they then offered the first fruits of the wheat harvest, which then was completed: it was instituted to oblige the Israelites to repair to the temple, there to acknowledge the Lord's dominion, and also to render thanks to God for the law he had given them from mount Sinai, on the fiftieth day after their coming out of Egypt.
Calmet.
 'Tis since the nuptial of Lucentio, Come pentecost as quickly as it will
 Some five and twenty years.
Shakef.
PENTECOSTAL. adj. [from pentecost.] Belonging to Whitfun-tide.
 I have composed sundry collects, made up out of the church collects with some little variation; as the collects ad-ventual, quadragesimal, paschal or pentecostal.
Sanderfon.
PENTHOUSE. n. f. [pent, from pen, Fr. and house.] A shed hanging out aloft from the main wall.
 This is the penthouse under which Lorenzo desir'd us to make a stand.
Shakef.
 Sleep shall neither night nor day
 Hang upon his penthouse lid.
Shakef.
 The Turks lurking under their penthouses, laboured with mattocks to dig up the foundation of the wall.
Kneller.
 A blow was received by riding under a penthouse.
Wifeman.
 Those defensive engines, made by the Romans into the form of penthouses to cover the assailants from the weapons of the besieged, would he presently batter in pieces with stones and blocks.
Wilkins.
 My penthouse eye-brows and my shaggy beard
 Offend your sight; but these are manly signs.
Dryden.
 Drops from some penthouse on her wretched head.
Rowe.
PENTICE. n. f. [appentir, French; pentice, Italian.] It is commonly supposed a corruption of penthouse; but perhaps pentice is the true word. A sloping roof.
 Climes that fear the falling and lying of much snow, ought to provide more inclining pentices.
Watton.
PENTILE. n. f. [pent and tile.] A tile formed to cover the sloping part of the roof.
 Pentiles are thirteen inches long, with a button to hang on the laths; they are hollow and circular.
Moxon.
PENT up. part. adj. [pent, from pen and up.] Shut up.
 Close pent up guilts
 Rive your concealing continents.
Shakef.
PENULTIMA. n. f. [Latin.] The last syllable but one.
PENUMBRA. n. f. [pen and umbra, Latin.] An imperfect shadow.
 The breadth of this image answered to the sun's diameter, and was about two inches and the eighth part of an inch,
 including the penumbra.
Newton.
PENURIOS. adj. [from penuria, Latin.]
 1. Niggardly; sparing; not liberal; fordidly mean.
 What more can our penurious reason grant
 To the large whale or catted elephant,
Prior.

PEN

2. Scant; not plentiful.
 Some penurious spring by chance appear'd
 Scanty of water.
Addison.
PENURIOSLY. adv. [from penurious.] Sparingly; not plentifully.
PENURIOSNESS. n. f. [from penurious.] Niggardliness; parsimony.
 If we consider the infinite industry and penuriousness of that people, it is no wonder that, notwithstanding they furnish as great taxes as their neighbours, they make a better figure.
Addison on the State of the War.
PENURY. n. f. [penuria, Lat.] Poverty; indigence.
 The penury of the ecclesiastical estate.
Hooker.
 Who can perfectly declare
 The wondrous cradle of thy infancy?
 When thy great mother Venus first thee bare,
 Begot of plenty and of penury.
Spenser.
 Sometimes am I king;
 Then treason makes me with myself a beggar;
 And so I am: then crushing penury
 Persuades me, I was better when a king;
 Then I am king'd again.
Shakef.
 All innocent they were exposed to hardship and penury, which, without you, they could never have escaped.
Spratt.
 Let them not fill be obtinately blind,
 Still to divert the good design'd,
 Or with malignant penury
 To starve the royal virtues of his mind.
Dryden.
 May they not justly to our climes upbraid
 Shortness of night, and penury of shade.
Prior.
PEONY. n. f. [paonia, Latin.]
 The peony hath a flower composed of several leaves, which are placed orbicularly, and expand in form of a rose, out of whose empalement rises the pointal, which afterwards becomes a fruit, in which several little horns bent downwards are gathered, as it were, into a little head covered with down opening lengthways, containing many globular seeds.
Miller.
 A physician had often tried the peony root unseasonably gathered without success; but having gathered it when the decreasing moon passes under Aries and tied the slit root about the necks of his patients, he had freed more than one from epileptical fits.
Boyle.
PEOPLE. n. f. [peuple, Fr. populus, Lat.]
 1. A nation; these who compose a community.
 Prophecy again before many peoples and nations and tongues.
Revelations x. 11.
 Ants are a people not strong, yet they prepare their meat in summer.
Proverbs xxx. 25.
 What is the city but the people?
 True the people are the city.
Shakef.
 2. The vulgar.
 The knowing artist may Judge better than the people, but a play
 Made for delight,
 If you approve it not, has no excuse.
Waller.
 3. The commonalty; not the princes or nobles.
 4. Persons of a particular class.
 If a man temper his actions to content every combination of peoples, the musick will be the fuller.
Bacon.
 A small red flower in the stubble fields country people call the wincopee.
Bacon.
 5. Men, or persons in general. In this sense, the word people is used indefinitely, like on in French.
 The frogs petitioning for a king, bids people have a care of struggling with heaven.
L'Estrange.
 People were tempted to lend by great premiums and large interest.
Swift's Miscellanies.
 Watery liquor will keep an animal from starving by diluting the fluids; for people have lived twenty-four days upon nothing but water.
Arbutnot on Aliments.
 People in adversity should preserve laudable customs.
Clarissa.
 To PEOPLE. v. a. [peupler, French.] To stock with inhabitants.
 Suppose that Brute, or whosoever else that first peopled this island, had arrived upon Thames, and called the island after his name Britannia.
Raleigh's History of the World.
 He would not be alone, who all things can;
 But peopled Heav'n with angels, earth with man.
Dryden.
 Beauty a monarch is,
 Which kingly power magnificently proves
 By crouds of slaves, and peopled empire loves.
Dryden.
 A peopled city made a desert place.
Dryden.
 Impenious death directs his ebullance;
 Peoples great Henry's tombs, and leads up Holben's dance.
Prior.
PEPASTICKS. n. f. [pipasticks.] Medicines which are good to help the rawness of the stomach and digest crudities.
Dict.
PEPPER. n. f. [piper, Lat. peivre, Fr.]
 We have three kinds of pepper; the black, the white, and the long, which are three different fruits produced by three distinct plants: black pepper is a dried fruit of the size of a vetch and roundish, but rather of a deep brown than a black colour.

PER

colour: with this we are supplied by the Dutch from their East Indian settlements in Java, Malabar and Sumatra, and the plant has the same heat and fiery taste that we find in the pepper: white pepper is commonly factitious, and prepared from the black by taking off the outer bark, but there is a rarer sort, which is a genuine fruit naturally white: long pepper is a fruit gathered while unripe and dried, of an inch or an inch and half in length, and of the thickness of a large goose quill: it much resembles the catkins of some of our trees, and contains several feeds singly in small membranaceous cells, and these feeds are of an acrid, hot and bitterish taste: the whole fruit is of a brownish grey colour and cylindrick in its figure. Hill.
Scatter o'er the blooms the pungent dust
Of pepper, fatal to the frosty tribe. Thomson's Spring.

To PEPPER. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To sprinkle with pepper.
2. To beat; to mangle with shot or blows.
I have peppered two of them; two I have paid, two rogues in buckram suits. Shakep. Henry IV.
PEPPERBOX. n. f. [pepper and box.] A box for holding pepper. I will not take the leacher; he cannot creep into a half-penny purse nor into a pepperbox. Shakep.
PEPPER-CORN. n. f. [pepper and corn.] Any thing of inconsiderable value.

Our performances, though dues, are like those peppercorns which freeholders pay their landlord to acknowledge that they hold all from him. Boyle.

Folks from mud-wall'd tenement
Bring landlords peppercorn for rent. Prior.
PEPPERMINT. n. f. [pepper and mint.] Mint eminently hot.
PEPPERWORT. n. f. [pepper and wort.] A plant.
Pepperwort hath a flower consisting of four leaves, which are placed in form of a cross, from whose cup arises the pistillum, which afterward becomes a spear-shaped fruit, which is divided in the middle by a partition into two cells, which contain many oblong feeds. Miller.
PEPTICK. adj. [πεπτικός.] What helps digestion. Ans.
PERACUTE. n. f. [peracutus, Lat.] Very sharp; very violent. Malign, continual peracute fevers, after most dangerous attacks, suddenly remit of the ardent heat. Harvey.
PERADVENTURE. adv. [par adventure, Fr.]

1. Perhaps; may be; by chance.
That wherein they might not be like unto either, was such peradventure as had been no whit less unlawful. Shaker.
As you return, visit my house; let our old acquaintance be renewed; peradventure I will with you to court. Shakep.
What peradventure may appear very full to me, may appear very crude and unimaged to a stranger. Digby.
2. Doubt; question. It is sometimes used as a noun, but not gracefully nor properly.
Though men's persons ought not to be hated, yet without all peradventure their practices justify may. South.
To PERAGRATE. v. a. [peragrate, Lat.] To wander over; to ramble through. Dist.
PERAGRATION. n. f. [peragrate.] The act of passing through any state or space.

A month of peragrati is the time of the moon's revolution from any part of the zodiac unto the same again, and this containeth but twenty-seven days and eight hours. Brown.
The moon has two accounts which are her months or years of revolution; one her periodic month, or month of peragrati, which chiefly respects her own proper motion or place in the zodiac, by which she like the sun performs her revolution round the zodiac from any one point to the same again. Holder on Time.
To PERAMBULATE. v. a. [perambulo, Lat.]

1. To walk through.
2. To survey, by passing through.
Persons the lord deputy should nominate to view and perambulate Irish territories, and thereupon to divide and limit the same. Davies on Ireland.
PERAMBULATION. n. f. [perambulation.] The act of passing through or wandering over.
1. The act of passing through for the coming back of the Armada, even when they were wandering and making their perambulation of the northern seas. Bacon.
2. A travelling survey.

France is a square of five hundred and fifty miles traverse, thronging with such multitudes, that the general calcul, made in the last perambulation exceeded eighteen millions. Hewel.
PERCASE. adv. [par and case.] Perchance; perhaps. Not used.
A virtuous man will be virtuous in solitude, and not only in theatro, though percase it will be more strong by glory and fame, as an heat which is doubled by reflexion. Bacon.
PERCEANT. adj. [perceant, Fr.] Piercing; penetrating.
Wonderous quick and perceant was his sight
As eagle's eyes, that can behold the sun. Fairy Queen.
PERCEIVABLE. adj. [perceive.] Perceptible; such as falls under perception.

The body, though it really moves, yet not changing perceivable distance with some other bodies, as fast as the ideas of our own minds will follow one another, seems to stand still; as the hands of clocks. Lake.

PER

That which we perceive when we see figure, as perceivable by sight, is nothing but the termination of colour. Lake.
PERCEIVABLY. adv. [perceivable.] In such a manner as may be observed or known.

To PERCEIVE. v. a. [percipio, Lat.]
1. To discover by some sensible effects.

Consider,
When you above perceive me like a crow,
That it is place which lessens and sets off. Shakep.
2. To know; to observe.
Jesus perceived in his spirit, that they so reasoned within themselves.
His sons come to honour, and he knoweth it not; and they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not. Job xiv. 21.
Till we ourselves see it with our own eyes, and perceive it by our own understandings, we are still in the dark. Lake.
How do they come to know that themselves think, when they themselves do not perceive it. Lake.

3. To be affected by.
The upper regions of the air perceive the collection of the matter of tempests before the air here below. Bacon.
PERCEPTION. n. f. [perception.] The state of being an object of the senses or mind; the state of being perceptible.

1. Perception, the power of perceiving.
The illumination is not so bright and fulgent, as to obscure or extinguish all perceptibility of the reason. More.
PERCEPTIBLE. adj. [perceptibilis, Fr. perceptus, Lat.] Such as may be known or observed.
No sound is produced but with a perceptible blast of the air, and with some resistance of the air strucken. Bacon.
When I think, remember or abstract; these intrinsic operations of my mind are not perceptible by my sight, hearing, taste, smell or feeling. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
It perceives them immediately, as being immediately objected to and perceptible to the sense; as I perceive the sun by my sight. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
In the anatomy of the mind, as in that of the body, more good will accrue to mankind by attending to the large, open and perceptible parts, than by studying too much finer nerves. Pope's Essay on Man.

PERCEPTIBLY. adv. [perceptibilis.] In such a manner as may be perceived.
The woman decays perceptibly every week. Pope.

PERCEPTION. n. f. [perception, Fr. perceptus, Lat.]
1. The power of perceiving; knowledge; consciousness.
Matter hath no life nor perception, and is not conscious of its own existence. Bentley's Sermons.
Perception is that act of the mind, or rather a passion or impression, whereby the mind becomes conscious of anything; as when I feel hunger, thirst, cold or heat. Watts.
2. The act of perceiving; observation.
3. Notion; idea.
By the inventors, and their followers that would seem not to come too short of the perceptions of the leaders, they are magnified. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
4. The state of being affected by something.
Great mountains have a perception of the disposition of the air to tempests sooner than the valleys below; and therefore they say in Wales, when certain hills have their night caps on, they mean mischief. Bacon.

This experiment discovereth perception in plants to move towards that which should comfort them, though at a distance. Bacon's Natural History.
PERCEPTIVE. adj. [perceptus, Lat.] Having the power of perceiving.
There is a difficulty that pincheth: the soul is awake and solicited by external motions, for some of them reach the perceptive region in the most silent repose and obscurity of night: what is it then that prevents our sensations? Glanville.
Whatever the least real point of the essence of the perceptive part of the soul does perceive, every real point of the perceptive must perceive at once. More's Divine Dialogues.
PERCEPTIVITY. n. f. [perceptive.] The power of perception or thinking. Lake.

PERCH. n. f. [perca, Lat. perche, Fr.]
The perch is one of the fishes of prey, that, like the pike and trout, carries his teeth in his mouth, he dare venture to kill and destroy several other kinds of fish: he has a hooked or hog back, which is armed with stiff bristles, and all his skin armed with thick hard scales, and hath two fins on his back: he spawns but once a year, and is held very nutritive. Watts's Angler.
PERCH. n. f. [perica, Lat. perche, Fr.]
1. A measure of five yards and a half; a pole.
2. [perche, Fr.] Something on which birds roost or sit. Dryden.
For the narrow perch I cannot tide.
To PERCH. v. n. [percher, Fr. from the noun.] To sit or roost as a bird.
He percheth on some branch thereby;
To weather him and his moist wings to dry. Spenser.

Let owls keep close within the trees, and not perch upon the upper boughs. South's Sermons.

They wing'd their flight aloft, then stooping low,
Perch'd on the double tree, that bears the golden bough. Dry.
Glory like the trembling eagle stood
Perch'd on my beaver: in the Granic flood,
When fortune's self my standard trembling bore,
And the pale fates stood frighted on the shore. Lee.
Holds of birds that wing the liquid air,
Perch'd in the boughs, had nightly lodging there. Dryden.
To PERCH. v. a. To place on a perch.
It would be notoriously perceptible, if you could perch yourself as a bird on the top of some high steeple. More.
As evening dragon came,
Affailant on the perched roots,
And nests in order rang'd
Of some villatic fowl. Milton's Agonistes.

PERCHANCE. adv. [per and chance.] Perhaps; peradventure.
How long within this wood intend you stay?
—Perchance till after Theseus' wedding day. Shakep.
Finding him by nature little studious, the chuse rather to endure him with ornaments of youth; as dancing and fencing, not without aim then perchance at a courtier's life. Wotton.
Only Smithfield ballad perchance to embalm the memory of the other. L'Estrange.

PERCHERS. n. f. Paris candles used in England in ancient times; also the larger sort of wax candles, which were usually set upon the altar. Bailey.
PERCIPIENT. adj. [percipiens, Lat.] Perceiving; having the power of perception.
No article of religion hath credibility enough for them; and yet these cautious and quickighted gentlemen can wink and swallow down this foolish opinion about percipient atoms. Bentley's Sermons.

Sensation and perception are not inherent in matter as such; for if it were so, every flock or stone would be a percipient and rational creature. Bentley's Sermons.
PERCIPIENT. n. f. One that has the power of perceiving.
The soul is the sole percipient, which hath animadversion and sense properly so called, and the body is only the receiver of corporeal impressions. Glanville's Sept.
Nothing in the extended percipient perceives the whole, but only part. More's Divine Dialogues.

PERCLOSE. n. f. [per and close.] Conclusion; last part.
By the perclose of the same verse, vagabond is understood for such an one as travellet in fear of revengement. Raleigh.
To PERCOLATE. v. a. [percolo, Lat.] To strain.
The evidences of fact are percolated through a vast period of ages. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
PERCOLATION. n. f. [percolatio.] The act of straining; purification or separation by straining.

Experiments touching the straining and passing of bodies one through another, they call percolation. Bacon.
Water passing through the veins of the earth is rendered fresh and potable, which it cannot be by any percolation we can make, but the saline particles will pass through a tenfold filter. Ray on the Creation.
To PERCUSS. v. a. [percutio, Lat.] To strike.
Flame percussed by air giveth a noise; as in blowing of the fire by bellows; and so likewise flame percussing the air strongly. Bacon's Natural History.
PERCUSSION. n. f. [percutio, Lat. percussio, Fr.]
1. The act of striking; stroke.

With thy grim looks, and
The thunder-like percussion of thy founts, Thou mad'st thine enemies shake. Shakep.
The percussion of the greater quantity of air is produced by the greatness of the body percussing. Bacon.
Some note, that the times when the stroke or percussion of an envious eye doth most hurt are, when the party envied is beheld in glory. Bacon's Essays.
The vibrations or tremors excited in the air by percussion, continue a little time to move from the place of percussion in concentric spheres to great distances. Newton's Opticks.
Marbles taught him percussion and the laws of motion, and tops the centrifugal motion. Pope and Arbuthnot's Scriblers.
2. Effect of sound in the ear.
In double rhymes the percussion is stronger. Rymer.
PERCUTIENT. n. f. [percutiens, Latin.] Striking; having the power to strike.
Inequality of sounds is accidental, either from the roughness or obliquity of the passage, or from the doubling of the percussion. Bacon.

PERDITION. n. f. [perditio, Lat. perdition, Fr.]
1. Destruction; ruin; death.
Upon tidings now arrived, importing the meek perdition of the Turkish fleet, every man puts himself in triumph. Shakep.
2.

PER

We took ourselves for free men, seeing there was no danger of our utter perdition, and lived most joyfully; going abroad, and seeing what was to be seen. Bacon.
Quick let us part! Perdition's in thy preference,
And horror dwells about thee! Addison's Cato.

2. Loss.
There's no foul loft,
Nay not so much perdition as an hair
Betid to any creature in the vessel
Thou saw'st sink. Shakep. Tempest.

3. Eternal death.
As life and death, mercy and wrath, are matters of knowledge, all men's salvation and some men's endless perdition are things so opposite, that whoever doth affirm the one, must necessarily deny the other. Hooker, b. v. f. 49.
Men once fallen away from undoubted truth, do after wander for ever more in vices unknown, and daily travel towards their eternal perdition. Raleigh's History of the World.
PERDURE. adv. [This word, which among us is adverbially taken, comes from the French perdure, or forlorn hope: as perdue or advanced sentinel.] Close; in ambush.

Few minutes he had lain perdue,
To guard his desperate avenue. Hudibras.
PERDURABLE. adj. [perdure, Lat.] Last; thrown away.
There may be some wandering perdurable wishes of known impossibilities; as a man who hath committed an offence, may wish he had not committed it: but to chuse efficaciously and impossibility, is as impossible as an impossibility. Bramhall.
PERDURABLE. adj. [perdurable, Fr. perdure, Lat.] Lasting; long continued. A word not in use, nor accented according to analogy.

Confess me knit to thy deserving with Cables of perdurable toughnels. Shakep. Othello.
O perdurable shame; let's stab ourselves. Shakep.
PERDURABLY. adv. [perdurable.] Lastingly.
Why would he for the momentary trick,
Be perdurably fix'd? Shakep. Measure for Measure.
PERDURATION. n. f. [perdure, Lat.] Long continuance. Ans.
PEREGAL. adj. [French.] Equal. Osfolet.

Whom thou wait peregal to the best,
And wont to make the jolly shepherds glad;
With piping and dancing, did pass the rest. Spenser.
To PEREGRINATE. v. n. [peregrinus, Lat.] To travel; to live in foreign countries. Dist.
PEREGRINATION. n. f. [peregrinus, Lat.] Travel; abode in foreign countries.

It was agreed between them, what account he should give of his peregrination abroad. Bacon's Henry VII.
That we do not contend to have the earth pass for a paradise, we reckon it only as the land of our peregrination, and aspire after a better country. Bentley's Sermons.
PEREGRINE. adj. [peregrin, old Fr. peregrinus, Lat.] Foreign; not native; not domestick.

The received opinion, that putrefaction is caused by cold or peregrine and preternatural heat, is but nugation. Bacon.
To PEREMPT. v. a. [peremptus, Lat.] To kill; to crush. A law term.
Nor is it any objection, that the cause of appeal is perempted by the desertion of an appeal; because the office of the judge continues after such instance is perempted. Ayliffe.
PEREMPTION. n. f. [peremptio, Lat. peremption, Fr.] Cruelty; extinction. Law term.

This peremption of instance was introduced in favour of the publick, lest suits should otherwise be rendered perpetual. Ayliffe's Parergon.
PEREMPTORILY. adv. [peremptory.] Absolutely; positively; so as to cut off all farther debate. Daniel.
Norfolk denies them peremptorily.

Not to speak peremptorily or conclusively, touching the point of possibility, till they have heard me deduce the means of the execution. Bacon's Holy War.
Some organs are so peremptorily necessary, that the extinguishment of the spirits doth speedily follow, but yet so as there is an interim. Bacon's Natural History.

In all conferences it was insisted peremptorily, that the king must yield to what power was required. Clarendon.
Some talk of letters before the deluge; but that is a matter of mere conjecture, and nothing can be peremptorily determined either the one way or the other. Woodward.

Never judge peremptorily on first appearances. Clarissa.
PEREMPTIONNESS. n. f. [peremptory.] Positiveness; absolute decision; dogmatism.
Peremptoriness is of two sorts; the one a magistratiness in matters of opinion; the other a positiveness in relating matters of fact. Government of the Tongue.
Self-conceit and peremptoriness in a man's own opinion are not commonly reputed vices. Tillotson's Sermons.
PEREMPTORY. adj. [peremptorius, low Lat. peremptaire, Fr. from peremptus, killed.] Dogmatical; absolute; such as destroys all further expostulation.
As touching the apostle, wherein he was so resolute and peremptory, our Lord Jesus Christ made manifest unto him, ev.

PERICRANIUM, n. s. [from περι and cranium; perierane, Fr.] The pericranium is the membrane that covers the skull: it is a very thin and nervous membrane of an exquisite sense, such as covers immediately not only the cranium, but all the bones of the body, except the teeth; for which reason it is also called the periosteum. Quincy.

Having divided the pericranium, I saw a fissure running the whole length of the wound. Wise man's Surgery.

PERICULOUS, adj. [from periculum, Lat.] Dangerous; jeopardous; hazardous. A word not in use.

As the moon every seventh day arriveth unto a contrary sign, so Saturn, which remaineth about as many years in one sign, and holdeth the same consideration in years as the moon in days, doth cause these periculous periods. Brown.

PERIGEE, n. s. [from περι and γει; perigée, Fr.] Is a point in operation; unnecessary diligence.

PERIGEE, n. s. [from περι and γει; perigée, Fr.] Is a point in PERIGEE, the heavens, wherein a planet is said to be in its nearest distance possible from the earth. Harri.

By the proportion of its motion, it was at the creation, at the beginning of Aries, and the perigeum or nearest point in Libra. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PERIGEE, n. s. [from περι and γει; perigée, Fr.] Is that point of a planet's orbit, wherein it is nearest the sun. Harri.

Sir Isaac Newton has made it probable, that the comet, which appeared in 1680, by approaching to the sun in its perihelium, acquired such a degree of heat, as to be 50000 years a cooling. Chyone's Philosophical Principles.

PERIL, n. s. [from peril, Fr. perikel, Dutch; periculum, Lat.] 1. Danger; hazard; jeopardy.

Dear Pyrocles, be liberal unto me of those things, which have made you indeed precious to the world, and now doubt not to tell of your perils. Sidney, b. ii.

How many perils do infold
The righteous man to make him daily fall. Fairy Queen.

In the act what perils shall we find,
If either place, or time, or other course,
Cause us to alter th' order now assign'd. Daniel.

The love and pious duty which you pay,
Have pass'd the perils of so hard a way. Dryden.

Strong, healthy and young people are more in peril by pestilential fevers, than the weak and old. Arbutnot.

2. Denunciations; danger denounced.

I told her,
On your displeasure's peril,
She should not visit you. Shakep. Winter's Tale.

PERILOUS, adj. [from perilous, Fr. from peril.] 1. Dangerous; hazardous; full of danger.

Alterations in the service of God, for that they impair the credit of religion, are therefore perilous in common-weals, which have no continuance longer than religion hath all reverence done unto it. Hooker, b. v. f. 2.

Her guard is chastity,
She that has that is clad in compleat steel,
And like a quiver'd nymph with arrows keen
May trace huge forests and unharbour'd heaths, Infamous hills and sandy perilous wilds. Milton.

Dictate propitious to my devious ear,
What arts can captivate the changeable fear:
For perilous th' assay, unheard the toil
To clude the presence of a God by guile. Pope.

Into the perilous flood Bear fearless. Thomson.

2. It is used by way of emphasis, or ludicrous exaggeration of any thing bad.

Thus was th' accomplish'd squire endu'd
With gifts and knowledge perilous threw'd. Hudibras.

3. Smart; witty. In this sense it is, I think, only applied to children, and probably obtained its signification from the notion, that children eminent for wit, do not live; a witty boy was therefore a perilous boy, or a boy in danger. It is vulgarly perilous.

'Tis a perilous boy,
Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable;
He's all the mother's from the top to toe. Shakep.

PERILOUSLY, adv. [from perilous.] Dangerously.

PERILOUSNESS, n. s. [from perilous.] Dangerfulness.

PERIMETER, n. s. [from περι and μετρον; perimetre, Fr.] The compass or sum of all the sides which bound any figure of what kind soever, whether rectilinear or mixed.

By compressing the glasses still more, the diameter of this ring would increase, and the breadth of its orbit or perimeter decrease, until another new colour emerged in the centre of the last. Newton's Opticks.

PERIOD, n. s. [from περι and οδος; periados.] 1. A circuit.

2. Time in which any thing is performed, so as to begin again in the same manner.

Tell thee, that the sun is fixed in the centre, that the earth with all the planets roll round the sun in their several periods; they cannot admit a syllable of this new doctrine. Watts.

PER

3. A stated number of years; a round of time, at the end of which the things comprised within the calculation shall return to the state in which they were at beginning.

A cycle or period is an account of years that has a beginning and end too, and then begins again as often as it ends. Holder on Time.

We stile a lesser space a cycle, and a greater by the name of period; and you may not improperly call the beginning of a large period the epocha thereof. Holder on Time.

4. The end or conclusion.

If my death might make this island happy,
And prove the period of their tyranny,
I would expend it with all willingness;
But mine is made the prologue to their play. Shakep.

There is nothing so secret that shall not be brought to light within the compass of our world; whatsoever concerns this sublimary world in the whole extent of its duration, from the chaos to the last period. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

What anxious moments pass between
The birth of plots and their last fatal periods,
Oh! 'tis a dreadful interval of time. Addison.

5. The state at which any thing terminates.

Beauty's empires, like to greater states,
Have certain periods set, and hidden fates. Suckling.

Light-conserving stones must be set in the sun before they retain light, and the light will appear greater or lesser, until they come to their utmost period. Dryden.

6. Length of duration.

Some experiment would be made how by art to make plants more lasting than their ordinary period; as to make a stalk of wheat last a whole year. Bacon's Natural History.

7. A complete sentence from one full stop to another.

Periods are beautiful, when they are not too long: for so they have their strength too as in a pike or javelin. B. Johnson.

Is this the confidence you gave me,
Lean on it safely, not a period
Shall be unaid for me. Milton.

Syllogism is made use of to discover a fallacy, cunningly wrapt up in a smooth period. Locke.

For the assistance of weak memories, the first words of every period in every page may be written in distinct colours. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

From the tongue
Th' unfinish'd period falls. Thomson's Spring.

To PERIOD, v. a. [from the noun.] To put an end to. A bad word.

Your letter he desires
To those have shut him up, which failing to him, Periods his comfort. Shakep. Timon of Athens.

PERIODICAL, adj. [from periodique, Fr. from period.] 1. Circular; making a circuit; making a revolution.

Was the earth's periodical motion always in the same plane with that of the diurnal, we should miss of those kindly increases of day and night. Darwin.

Four moons perpetually roll round the planet Jupiter, and are carried along with him in his periodical circuit round the sun. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

2. Happening by revolution at some stated time.

Astrological undertakers would raise men out of some slimy soil, impregnated with the influence of the stars upon some remarkable and periodical conjunctions. Bentley.

3. Regular; performing some action at stated times.

The confusion of mountains and hollows furnished me with a probable reason for those periodical fountains in Switzerland, which flow only at such particular hours of the day. Addison.

4. Relating to periods or revolutions.

It is implicitly denied by Aristotle in his politics, in that discourse against Plato, who measured the vicissitude and mutation of states by a periodical fatality of number. Brown.

PERIODICALLY, adv. [from periodical.] At stated periods.

The three tides ought to be understood of the space of the night and day, and then there will be a regular flux and reflux thrice in that time every eight hours periodically. Brown.

PERIOSTEUM, n. s. [from περι and οστος; perioste, Fr.] All the bones are covered with a very sensible membrane, called the periosteum. Chyone's Philosophical Principles.

PERIPHERY, n. s. [from περι and ορος; peripherie, Fr.] Circumference.

Neither is this sole vital faculty sufficient to exterminate noxious humours to the periphery or outward parts. Harvey.

To PERIPHERASE, v. a. [from periphraze, Fr.] To express one word by many; to express by circumlocution.

PERIPHERASIS, n. s. [from periphraze, Fr.] Circumlocution; use of many words to express the sense of one: as, for death, we may say, the loss of life.

They make the gates of Thebes and the mouths of this river a constant periphraze for this number seven. Brown.

She contains all blits,
And makes the world but her periphraze. Cleaveland.

They

PER

They shew their learning uselessly, and make a long periphraze on every word of the book they explain. Watts.

The periphraze and circumlocutions, by which Homer expresses the single act of dying, have supplied succeeding poets with all their manners of phrasing it.

PERIPHRASTICAL, adj. [from periphraze.] Circumlocutory; expressing the sense of one word in many.

PERIPNEUMONY, n. s. [from περι and πνευμων; peripneumonie, Fr.] An inflammation of the lungs.

Lungs of imbibing phlegmatick and melancholick humours, are now and then comprehended schirous, by distipation of the subtiler parts, and lapidification of the grosser that remain, or may be left indurated, through the gross reliques of peripneumonia or inflammation of the lungs. Harvey.

A peripneumony is the last fatal symptom of every disease; for no body dies without a stagnation of the blood in the lungs, which is the total extinction of breath. Arbutnot.

To PERISH, v. n. [from perir, Fr. perere, Lat.] 1. To die; to be destroyed; to be lost; to come to nothing.

I burn, I pine, I perish,
If I achieve not this young modest girl. Shakep.

If I have seen any perish for want of clothing, then let mine arm fall from my shoulder-blade. Job xxxi. 29.

He keepeth back his soul from the pit, and his life from perishing by the sword. Job xxxiii. 18.

They perish quickly from off the good land. Deut. xi. 18.

I perish with hunger.
The sick, when their case comes to be thought desperate, are carried out and laid on the earth to perish without assistance or pity. Locke.

Characters drawn on dust, that the first breath of wind effaces, are altogether as useful as the thoughts of a soul that perish in thinking. Locke.

Exposing their children, and leaving them in the fields to perish by want, has been the practice. Locke.

Still when the lust of tyrant pow'r succeeds,
Some Athens perishes, or some Tully bleeds. Pope.

In the Iliad, the anger of Achilles had caused the death of so many Grecians; and in the Odyssey, the subjects perished through their own fault. Pope.

2. To be in a perpetual state of decay.

Duration, and time which is a part of it, is the idea we have of perishing distance, of which no two parts exist together, but follow in succession; as expansion is the idea of lasting distance, all whole parts exist together. Locke.

3. To be lost eternally.

These, as natural brute beasts made to be destroyed, speak evil of the things they understand not, and shall utterly perish. 2 Peter ii. 12.

O suffer me not to perish in my sins, Lord carest thou not that I perish, who wilt that all should be saved, and that none should perish. Moretton's Daily Exercise.

To PERISH, v. a. To destroy; to decay. Not in use.

The splitting rocks cow'd in the sinking sands,
And would not dash me with their ragged sides;
Because thy flinty heart, more hard than they,
Might in thy palace perish Margaret. Shakep. Henry VI.

Kiss, prepar'd in black, to mourn thy perish'd lord. Dryden.

He was so reserved, that he would impart his secrets to nobody; whereupon this closeness did a little perish his understandings. Collier on Friendship.

Familiar now with grief your ears refrain,
And in the publick woe forget your own.
You weep not for a perish'd lord alone. Pope.

PERISHABLE, adj. [from perish.] Liable to perish; subject to decay; of short duration.

We derogate from his eternal power to ascribe to them the same dominion over our immortal souls, which they have over all bodily substances and perishable natures. Raleigh.

To these purposes nothing can so much contribute as medals of undoubted authority not perishable by time, nor confined to any certain place. Addison.

It is princes greatest present felicity to reign in their subjects hearts; but these are too perishable to preserve their memories, which can only be done by the pens of faithful historians. Swift.

Human nature could not sustain the reflection of having all its schemes and expectations to determine with this frail and perishable composition of flesh and blood. Rogers.

Of men decay. Pope's Odyssey.

PERISHABLENESS, n. s. [from perishable.] Liableness to be destroyed; liableness to decay.

Suppose an island separate from all commerce, but having nothing because of its commonness and perishableness, fit to supply the place of money; what reason could any have to enlarge his possessions beyond the use of his family. Locke.

PERISTALTIC, adj. [from περισταλτις; peristaltique, Fr.] Peristaltic motion is that vermicular motion of the guts, which is made by the contraction of the spiral fibres, whereby the excrements are pressed downwards and voided. Quincy.

PER

The peristaltic motion of the guts, and the continual expression of the fluids, will not suffer the least matter to be applied to one point the least instant. Arbutnot.

PERISTEIRION, n. s. [from περι and στερον; peristeirion, Fr.] The herb vervain. Diad.

PERISTYLE, n. s. [from περι and στυλη; peristyle, Fr.] A circular range of pillars. Arbutnot on Coins.

The Villa Gordiana had a peristyle of two hundred pillars.

PERISTYSTOLE, n. s. [from περι and συστολη; peristystole, Fr.] The pause or interval betwixt the two motions of the heart or pulse; namely, that of the systole or contraction of the heart, and that of diastole or dilatation. Diad.

PERITONEUM, n. s. [from περι and τονον; peritoneum, Fr.] This lies immediately under the muscles of the lower belly, and is a thin and soft membrane, which encloses all the bowels contained in the lower belly, covering all the inside of its cavity. Diad.

Wounds penetrating into the belly, are such as reach no farther inward than to the peritoneum. Wise man.

PERJURE, n. s. [from perjurus, Lat.] A perjured or forsworn person. A word not in use.

Hide thee, thou bloody hand,
Thou perjure, thou simulator of virtue, Thou art incestuous. Shakep. King Lear.

To PERJURE, v. a. [from perjuro, Lat.] To forswear; to taint with perjury. It is used with the reciprocal pronoun.

Who should be trusted now, when the right hand
Is perjur'd to the bosom? Shakep.

The law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawless and disobedient, for perjured persons. 1 Tim. i. 10.

PERJURER, n. s. [from perjuro.] One that swears falsely.

The common oath of the Scythians was by the sword and fire; for that they accounted those two special divine powers, which should work vengeance on the perjurors. Spenser.

PERJURY, n. s. [from perjurius, Lat.] False oath.

My great father-in-law, renowned Warwick,
Cried aloud — What scourge for perjury
Can this dark monarchy afford false Clarence,
And so he vanish'd. Shakep. Richard III.

PERIWIG, n. s. [from periwig, Fr.] Adornments hair; hair not natural, worn by way of ornament or concealment of baldness.

Her hair is auburn, mine is perfect yellow;
If that be all the difference in his love,
I'll get me such a colour'd periwig. Shakep.

It offends me to hear a robusious periwig-pated fellow tear a passion to tatters, to split the cars of the groundlings. Shakespeare.

The sun's Dishevel'd beams and scatter'd fires
Serve but for ladies periwigs and tines
In lovers sonnets. Donne.

Madam time, be ever bald,
I'll not thy periwig be call'd.
For vailing of their visages his highness and the marquiss bought each a periwig, somewhat to overshadow their foreheads. Watson.

They used false hair or periwigs. Arbutnot on Coins.

From her own head Megara takes
A periwig of twisted snakes,
Which in the nicest fashion curl'd,
Like toupets. Swift's Miscellanies.

To PERIWIG, v. a. [from the noun.] To dress in false hair.

Now when the winter's keener breath began
To crystallize the Baltic ocean,
To glaze the lakes, to bridle up the floods,
And periwig with snow the bald-pate woods. Sylvest.

Near the door an entrance gapes,
Crowded round with antick shapes,
Discord periwig'd with snakes,
See the dreadful strides she takes. Swift's Miscellanies.

PERIWINKLE, n. s.

1. A small shell fish; a kind of fish snail.

Thetis is represented by a lady of a brownish complexion, her hair disheveled about her shoulders, upon her head a coronet of periwinkle and escalop shells. Peacham.

2. A plant.

The periwinkle hath a flower cup, consisting of one leaf, that is divided into five long narrow segments: the flower also consists of one leaf, which expands in form of a falver, and is cut into five broad segments: the pointal, which arises from the center of the flower cup, becomes a fruit composed of two husks or pods, which contain oblong, cylindrical, furrowed seeds; to which may be added, that this plant shoots out many long creeping branches that strike out roots at their joints. Miller.

There are in use, for the prevention of the cramp, bands of green periwinkle tied about the calf of the leg. Bacon.

The common simples with us are comfrey, bugle, ladies mantle, and periwinkle. Wise man's Surgery.

TO PERK. v. n. [from perch, Skinner.] To hold up the head with an affected briskness.
If you think it a disgrace,
'That Edward's mits thus perks it in your face,
To see a piece of failing flesh and blood,
Let the modest matrons of the town
Come here in clouds, and stare the trumpet down. Pope.
TO PERK. v. a. To dress; to prank.
'Tis better to be lowly born,
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perk'd up in a glut'ring grief,
And wear a golden sorrow. Shakefp. Henry VIII.
PERK. adj. Pert; brisk; airy. Obsolete.
My ragged tongs
Went in the wind, and wag their wriggle tails,
Peck as a peacock, but nought avail. Spenser.
PERILOUS. adj. [from perilous.] Dangerous; full of hazard.
A perilous passage lies,
Where many maermaids haunt, making false melodies.
Spenser's Fairy Queen.
Late he far'd
In Phædræ's fleet bark over the perilous shard. Fa. Queen.
PERMAGY. n. f. A little Turkish boot. Diſt.
PERMANENCY. n. f. [from permanent.] Duration; continuance; continuance in the same state; lastingness.
Salt, they say, is the basis of solidity and permanency in compound bodies, without which the other four elements might be variously blended together, but would remain im-compact. Boyle.
Shall I dispute whether there be any such material being that hath such a permanency or fixedness in being. Hale.
From the permanency and immutability of nature hitherto,
they argued its permanency and immutability for the future.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
Such a punctum to our conceptions is almost equivalent to permanency and rest. Bentley.
PERMANENT. adj. [from permanent, Fr. permanens, Lat.] Durable; not decaying; unchanged.
If the authority of the maker do prove unchangeableness in the laws which God hath made, then must all laws which he hath made be necessarily forever permanent, though they be but of circumstance only. Hooker. b. iii. f. 10.
That eternal duration should be at once, is utterly unconceivable, and that one permanent instant should be commurate or rather equal to all successions of ages. Mure.
Pure and unchang'd, and needing no defence
From fins, as did my frailty innocence;
Their joy sincere, and with no more sorrow mixt,
Eternity stands permanent and fixt. Dryden.
PERMANENTLY. adv. [from permanent.] Durably; lastingly.
It does, like a compact or consistent body, deny to mingle permanently with the contiguous liquor. Boyle.
PERMANSSION. n. f. [from permanens, Lat.] Continuance.
Although we allow that hares may exchange their sex sometimes, yet not in that vicissitude it is presumed; from female unto male, and from male to female again, and so in a circle without a permanission in either. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PERMEABLE. adj. [from permeo, Lat.] Such as may be passed through.
The pores of a bladder are not easily permeable by air. Boyle.
TO PERMEATE. v. a. [from permeo, Lat.] To pass through.
This heat evaporates and elevates the water of the abyss, pervading not only the fissures, but the very bodies of the strata, permeating the interstices of the sand or other matter whereof they consist. Woodward's Natural History.
PERMEANT. adj. [from permeans, Lat.] Passing through.
It entereth not the veins, but taketh leave of the permeant parts at the mouths of the meferaicks. Brown.
PERMEATION. n. f. [from permeate.] The act of passing through.
PERMISSIBLE. adj. [from permisſeo, Lat.] Such as may be mingled.
PERMISSIBLE. adj. [from permisſus, Lat.] What may be permitted.
PERMISSION. n. f. [from permiſſio, Fr. permiſſus, Lat.] Allowance; grant of liberty.
With thy permiſſion then, and thus forewarn'd,
The willing I go. Milton.
You have given me your permiſſion for this address, and encouraged me by your perusal and approbation. Dryden.
PERMISSIVELY. adv. [from permiſſio, Lat.]
1. Granting liberty, not favour; not hindering, though not approving.
We bid this be done,
When evil deeds have their permiſſive pass,
And not the punishment. Shakefp. Measure for Measure.
Hypocriſy, the only evil that walks
Invincible, except to God alone
By his permiſſive will, through heav'n and earth. Milton.
2. Granted; suffered without hindrance; not authorized or favoured.
If this doth authorize usury, which before was but permiſſive,

PER

it is better to mitigate usury by declaration, than to suffer it to rage by connivance. Bacon's Essays.
Thus I embolden'd spake, and freedom us'd
Permiſſive, and acceptance found. Milton's Par. Loſt.
Clad
With what permiſſive glory since his fall
Was left him, or false glitter. Milton's Par. Loſt.
PERMISSIVELY. adv. [from permiſſive.] By bare allowance;
without hindrance.
As to a war for the propagation of the christian faith, I would be glad to hear spoken concerning the lawfulness, not only permiſſively, but whether it be not obligatory to christian princes to design it. Bacon's Holy War.
PERMISSION. n. f. [from permiſſus, Lat.] The act of mixing.
TO PERMIT. v. a. [from permiſſio, Lat. permittere, Fr.]
1. To allow without command.
What things God doth neither command nor forbid, the same he permitteth with approbation either to be done or left undone. Hooker. b. ii. f. 4.
2. To suffer, without authorizing or approving.
3. To allow; to suffer.
Women keep silence in the churches; for it is not per- mitted unto them to speak. 1 Corinthians xiv. 34.
Ye gliding ghosts, permit me to relate
The mystick wonders of your silent state. Dryden.
Age oppresses us by the same degrees that it instructs us, and permits not that our mortal members, which are frozen with our years, should retain the vigour of our youth. Dryden.
We should not permit an allowed, possible, great and weighty good to slip out of our thoughts, without leaving any reliſh, any desire of itself there. Locke.
After men have acquired as much as the laws permit them, they have nothing to do but to take care of the publick. Swift.
4. To give up; to resign.
Nor love thy life, nor hate; but what thou liſt,
Live well; how long, how short, permit to heav'n. Milton.
If the course of truth be permitted unto itself, it cannot escape many errors. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
TO THE GODS PERMIT THE.
What'er can urge ambitious youth to fight,
She pompously displays before their fight;
Laws, empire, all permitted to the sword. Dryden.
But to the gods permiſſio th' event of things. Albiſſi's Cat.
PERMIT. n. f. A written permission from an officer for transporting of goods from place to place, showing the duty on them to have been paid.
PERMITTANCE. n. f. [from permiſſio.] Allowance; bear-ance of opposition; permission. A bad word.
When this system of air comes, by divine permittances, to be corrupted by poisonous acrimonious steams, what havoc is made in all living creatures? Derham's Physico-Theology.
PERMIXTION. n. f. [from permiſſus, Lat.] The act of mingling; the state of being mingled.
They fell into the opposite extremity of one nature in Christ, the divine and human natures in Christ, in their con-cets, by permiſſion and confusion of substances, and of properties growing into one upon their adunation. Brevint.
PERMUTATION. n. f. [from permutatio, Fr. permutatio, Lat.]
Exchange of one for another.
A permutation of number is frequent in languages. Boyle.
Gold and silver, by their rarity, are wonderfully fitted for this use of permutation for all sorts of commodities. Ray.
TO PERMUTE. v. a. [from permutatio, Lat. permutare, Fr.] To exchange.
PERMUTER. n. f. [from permutatio, Fr. from permutare.] An exchanger; he who permutes.
PERNICIOUS. adj. [from perniciſus, Lat. perniciſus, Fr.]
1. Mischievous in the highest degree; destructive.
To remove all out of the church, whereto they show themselves to be sorrowful, would be, as we are persuaded, hurtful, if not perniciſus thereunto. Hooker. b. iv. f. 10.
I call you servile ministers,
That have with two perniciſus daughters join'd
Your high engender'd battles, 'gainst a head
So old and white as this. Shakefp. King Lear.
Let this perniciſus hour
Stand as accursed in the calendar! Shakefp.
2. [from pernix, Latin.] Quick. An use which I have found only in pernix, and which, as it produces an ambiguity, ought not to be imitated.
Part incentive reed
Provide, perniciſus with one touch to fire. Milton.
PERNICIOUSLY. adv. [from perniciſus.] Destructively; mischievously; ruinously.
Some wilful wits wilfully against their own knowledge,
perniciſus against their own conscience, have openly taught.
Aſham's Schoolmaster.
All the commons
Hate him perniciſus, and with him Shakefp. Henry VIII.
Ten fathom deep.
PERNICIOUSNESS. n. f. [from perniciſus.] The quality of being pernicious. PERNICITY.

PER

PERNICITY. n. f. [from perniciſus.] Swiftneſs; celerity.
Others armed with hard shells, others with prickles, the rest that have no such armature endued with great swiftneſs or perniciſus. Ray on the Creation.
PERORATION. n. f. [from peroratio, Lat.] The conclusion of an oration.
What means this passionate discourse?
This peroration with such circumstances?
True woman to the last—my peroration
I come to speak in spite of suffocation. Smart.
TO PERPEND. v. a. [from perpendo, Lat.] To weigh in the mind;
to consider attentively.
Thus it remains and the remainder thus;
Perpend. Shakefp. Hamlet.
Perpend, my princels, and give ear. Shakefp.
Consider the different conceits of men, and duly perpend
the imperfection of their discoveries. Brown.
PERPENDER. n. f. [from perpendo, Fr.] A coping stone.
PERPENDICULAR. n. f. [from perpendicularis, Fr. perpendicularum, Lat.]
Any thing hanging down by a straight line. Diſt.
PERPENDICULAR. adj. [from perpendicularis, Fr. perpendicularis, Latin.]
1. Crossing any other line at right angles. Of two lines, if one be perpendicular, the other is perpendicular too.
If in a line oblique their atoms rove,
Or in a perpendicular they move;
If some advance not flower in their race,
And some more swift, how could they be entangl'd. Blackmore.
The angle of incidence, is that angle, which the line, described by the incident ray, contains with the perpendicular to the reflecting or refracting surface at the point of incidence. Newton's Opticks.
2. Cutting the horizon at right angles.
Some define the perpendicular altitude of the highest mountains to be four miles. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PERPENDICULAR. n. f. A line crossing the horizon at right angles.
Though the quantity of water thus rising and falling be nearly constant as to the whole, yet it varies in the several parts of the globe; by reason that the vapours float in the atmosphere, and are not restored down again in a perpendi- cular upon the same precise tract of land. Woodward.
PERPENDICULARLY. adv. [from perpendicular.]
1. In such a manner as to cut another line at right angles.
2. In the direction of a straight line up and down.
Ten masts attach make not the altitude reach,
Which thou hast perpendicularly fall'n. Shakefp.
Irons refrigerated North and South, not only acquire a directive faculty, but if cooled upright and perpendicularly, they will also obtain the same. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Shoot up an arrow perpendicularly from the earth, the arrow will return to your foot again. More.
All weights naturally move perpendicularly downward. Ray.
PERPENDICULARITY. n. f. [from perpendicular.] The state of being perpendicular.
The meeting of two lines is the primary essential mode or difference of an angle; the perpendicularity of these lines is the difference of a right angle. Watts's Logic.
PERPENSION. n. f. [from perpendo.] Consideration. Not in use.
Unto reasonable perpensions it hath no place in some sciences. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
TO PERPETRATE. v. a. [from perpetro, Lat. perpetrare, Fr.]
1. To commit; to act. Always in an ill sense.
Heart of such a crime
As tragic poets, since the birth of time,
Ne'er feign'd a thronging audience to amaze;
But true and perpetrated in our days. Tate's Juvenal.
My tender infants or my careful fire,
These they returning will to death require,
Will perpetrate on them the first design,
And take the forfeit of their heads for mine. Dryden.
The forest, which in after-times,
Fierce Romulus, for perpetrated crimes,
A sacred refuge made. Dryden.
2. It is used by Butler in a neutral sense, in compliance with his verse, but not properly.
Success, the mark no mortal wit,
Or surest hand can always hit;
For whatsoever we perpetrate,
We do but row, we're steer'd by fate. Hudibras.
PERPETRATION. n. f. [from perpetrare.]
1. The act of committing a crime.
A desperate discontented affluence would, after the perpe- tration, have honest a meer private revenge. Weston.
A woman, who lends an ear to a seducer, may be infernally drawn into the perpetration of the most violent acts. Clarissa.
2. A bad action.
The strokes of divine vengeance, or of men's own con-sciences, always attend injurious perpetrations. King Charles.
PERPETUAL. adj. [from perpetuus, Fr. perpetuus, Latin.]
1. Never ceasing; eternal with respect to futurity.

PER

Mine is a love, which must perpetual be;
If you can be so just as I am true. Dryden.
2. Continual; uninterrupted; perennial.
Within those banks rivers now
Stream, and perpetual draw their humid train. Milton.
By the muscular motion and perpetual flux of the liquids, a great part of them is thrown out of the body. Arbutnot.
3. Perpetual grew. A screw which acts against the teeth of a wheel, and continues its action without end.
A perpetual screw hath the motion of a wheel and the force of a screw, being both infinite. Wilkin's Math. Magick.
PERPETUALLY. adv. [from perpetuus.] Constantly; continually; incessantly.
This verse is every where founding the very thing in your ears; yet the numbers are perpetually varied, so that the same sounds are never repeated twice. Dryden.
In passing from them to great distances, doth it not grow denser and denser perpetually; and thereby cause the gravity of those great bodies towards one another. Newton's Opticks.
The bible and common prayer book in the vulgar tongue, being perpetually read in churches, have proved a kind of standard for language, especially to the common people. Swift.
TO PERPETUATE. v. a. [from perpetuo, Fr. perpetuo, Lat.]
1. To make perpetual; to preserve from extinction; to eternize.
Medals, that are at present only mere curiosities, may be of use in the ordinary commerce of life, and at the same time perpetuate the glories of her majesty's reign. Addison.
Man cannot devise any other method so likely to preserve and perpetuate the knowledge and belief of a revelation, so necessary to mankind. Forbes.
2. To continue without cessation or intermission.
What is it, but a continued perpetuated voice from heaven, rebounding for ever in our ears? to give men no rest in their sins, no quiet from Christ's importunity, 'till they awake from their lethargick sleep and arise from so mortiferous a state, and permit him to give them life. Hammond.
PERPETUATION. n. f. [from perpetuo.] The act of making perpetual; incessant continuance.
Nourishing hair upon the moles of the face, is the per- petuation of a very ancient custom. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PERPETUITY. n. f. [from perpetuitas, Fr. perpetuitas, Lat.]
1. Duration to all futurity.
For men to alter those laws, which God for perpetuity hath established, were presumption most intolerable. Hooker.
Yet am I better Than one that's sick o' th' gout, since he had rather Groan so in perpetuity, than be cur'd
By the sure physican, death. Shakefp. Cymbeline.
Time as long again
Would be fill'd up with our thanks;
And yet we should, for perpetuity,
Go hence in debt. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.
Nothing wanted to his noble and heroic intentions, but only to give perpetuity to that which was in his time so happily established. Bacon.
2. Exemption from intermission or cessation.
A cycle or period begins again as often as it ends, and so obtains a perpetuity. Holder.
3. Something of which there is no end.
A morsel of potage for a birth-right, a present repast for a perpetuity. South's Sermons.
The ennobling property of the pleasure, that accrues to a man from religion, is, that he that has the property, may be also sure of the perpetuity. South's Sermons.
The laws of God as well as of the land
Abhor a perpetuity should stand;
Estates have wings, and hang in fortune's power. Pope.
TO PERPLEX. v. a. [from perplexus, Latin.]
1. To disturb with doubtful notions; to entangle; to make anxious; to tease with suspense or ambiguity; to distract;
to embarrass; to puzzle.
Being greatly perplexed in his mind, he determined to go into Persia. Mac. iii. 31.
Themselves with doubts they day and night perplex. Denb.
He perplexes the minds of the fair sex with nice speculations of philosophy, when he should engage their hearts. Dryden.
We can distinguish no general truths, or at least shall be apt to perplex the mind. Locke.
2. To make intricate; to involve; to complicate.
Their way
Lies through the perplex'd paths of this drear wood. Milt.
We both are involv'd
In the same intricate perplex'd distress. Addison's Cat.
What was thought obscure, perplexed, and too hard for our weak parts, will lie open to the understanding in a fair view. Locke.
3. To plague; to torment; to vex. A sense not proper.
Chloe's the wonder of her sex,
'Tis well her heart is tender,
How might such killing eyes perplex,
With virtue to defend her. Granville.

PERPLEX.

PER

PERPLEX. adj. [perplex, Lat. perplexus, Lat.] Intricate; difficult. Perplexed is the word in use.
How the soul directs the spirits for the motion of the body, according to the several animal exigents, is perplex in the theory. Glauville's Sept.

PERPLEXEDLY. adv. [from perplexed.] Intricately; with involution.

PERPLEXEDNESS. n. f. [from perplexed.]
1. Embarrassment; anxiety.
2. Intricacy; involution; difficulty.
Obscurity and perplexedness have been cast upon St. Paul's Epistles from without. Locke.

PERPLEXITY. n. f. [perplexit, Fr.]
1. Anxiety; distraction of mind.
The fear of him ever since hath put me into such perplexity, as now you found me. Sidney, b. ii.
Perplexity not suffering them to be idle, they think and do, as it were, in a phrensy. Hooker, b. v. f. 3.
The royal virgin, which beheld from far,
In pensive plight and sad perplexity,
The whole achievement of this doubtful war,
Came running fast to greet his victory. Fairy Queen.

2. Entanglement; intricacy.
Let him look for the labyrinth; for I cannot discern any, unless in the perplexity of his own thoughts. Stillingfleet.

PERPOTATION. n. f. [per and poto, Latin.] The act of drinking largely.

PERQUISITE. n. f. [perquisitus, Lat.] Something gained by a place or office over and above the settled wages.
Tell me, perfidious, was it fit
To make my cream a perquisite,
And steal to mend your wages. Widow and Cat.
To an honest mind, the best perquisites of a place are the advantages it gives a man of doing good. Addison.
To what your lawful perquisites amount. Swift.

PERQUISITION. n. f. [perquisitus, Lat.] An accurate enquiry; a thorough search. Ansforth.

PERRY. n. f. [poire, Fr. from poire.] Cyder made of pears.
Perry is the next liquor in esteem after cyder, in the ordering of which, let not your pears be over ripe before you grind them; and with some sorts of pears, the mixing of a few crabs in the grinding is of great advantage, making perry equal to the redstreak cyder. Mortimer.

TO PERSECUTE. v. a. [persecutor, Fr. persecutus, Lat.]
1. To harass with penalties; to pursue with malignity. It is generally used of penalties inflicted for opinions.
I persecuted this way unto the death. Acts xxii. 4.
2. To pursue with repeated acts of vengeance or enmity.
They might have fallen down, being persecuted of vengeance, and scattered abroad. Wisdom xi. 20.
Relate,
For what offence the queen of heav'n began
To persecute to brave, so just a man! Dryden.
3. To importune much; as, he persecutes me with daily solicitations. Sprat's Sermons.

PERSECUTION. n. f. [persecution, Fr. persecutio, Lat. from persecute.]
1. The act or practice of persecuting.
The Jews raised persecution against Paul and Barnabas, and expelled them. Acts xiii. 50.
Heavy persecution shall arise
On all, who in the worship persevere
Of spirit and truth. Milton.
The deaths and sufferings of the primitive christians had a great share in the conversion of those learned Pagans, who lived in the ages of persecution. Addison.

2. The state of being persecuted.
Our necks are under persecution; we labour and have no rest. Lam. v. 5.
Christian fortitude and patience had their opportunity in times of affliction and persecution. Sprat's Sermons.

PERSECUTOR. n. f. [persecutor, Fr. from persecute.] One who harasses others with continued malignity.
What man can do against them, not afraid,
Though to the death; against such cruelties
With inward consolations recompens'd;
And oft supported so, as shall amaze
Their proudest persecutors. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Henry rejected the pope's supremacy, but retained every corruption besides, and became a cruel persecutor. Swift.

PERSEVERANCE. n. f. [perseverance, Fr. perseverantia, Lat.] This word was once improperly accented on the second syllable. Perseverance in any design or attempt; steadiness in pursuits; constancy in progress. It is applied alike to good and ill.
The king becoming graces,
Bounty, perseverance, mercy, lowliness;
I have no relish of them. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
Perseverance keeps honour bright:
To have done, is to hang quite out of fashion,
Like rusty mail in monumental mockery.
They hate repentance more than perseverance in a fault. King Charles.

PER

Wait the seasons of providence with patience and perseverance in the duties of our calling, what difficulties soever we may encounter. L'Estrange.

Patience and perseverance overcome the greatest difficulties. Clarissa.

And perseverance with his batter'd shield.
PERSEVERANT. adj. [perseverant, Fr. perseverant, Lat.] Persevering; constant. Brooke.

TO PERSEVERE. v. n. [persevero, Lat. perseverer, Fr.] This word was anciently accented less properly on the second syllable. To persevere in an attempt; not to give over; not to quit the design.
But my rude musick, which was wont to please
Some dainty ears, cannot with any skill
The dreadful tempest of her wrath appease, Nor move the dolphin from her stubborn will;
But in her pride she doth persevere still. Spenser.
Thrice happy, if they know
Their happiness, and persevere upright!
Thus beginning, thus we persevere;
Our passions yet continue what they were. Milton.
To persevere in any evil course, makes you unhappy in this life, and will certainly throw you into everlasting torments in the next. Dryden.
Wake's Preparation for Death.

PERSEVERINGLY. adv. [from persevere.] With perseverance.

TO PERSIST. v. n. [persisto, Lat. persistor, Fr.] To persevere; to continue firm; not to give over.
Nothing can make a man happy, but that which shall last as long as he lasts; for an immortal soul shall persist in being not only when profit, pleasure and honour, but when time itself shall cease. South's Sermons.

If they persist in pointing their batteries against particular persons, no laws of war forbid the making reprisals. Addison.

PERSISTENCE. n. f. [from persist.] Persistence seems more proper.

PERSISTENCY. s. proper.

1. The state of persisting; steadiness; constancy; perseverance in good or bad.
The love of God better can consist with the indeliberate commissions of many sins, than with an allowed persistence in any one. Government of the Tongue.

2. Obstinacy; obduracy; contumacy.
Thou think'st me as far in the devil's book, as thou and Falstaff, for obduracy and persistence. Shakespeare.

The protractive trials of great Jove,
To find persistive constancy in men. Shakespeare.

PERSON. n. f. [personne, Fr. persona, Lat.]
1. Individual or particular man or woman.
A person is a thinking intelligent being, that has reason and reflection, and can consider itself as itself, the same thinking thing, in different times and places. Locke.

2. Man or woman considered as opposed to things, or distinct from them.
A zeal for persons is far more easily to be perverted, than a zeal for things. Sprat's Sermons.
To that we owe the safety of our persons and the property of our possessions. Atterbury's Sermons.

3. Human Being; considered with respect to mere corporal existence.
'Tis in her heart alone that you must reign;
You'll find her person difficult to gain. Dryden.

4. Man or woman considered as present, acting or suffering.
If I am traduc'd by tongues which neither know
My faculties nor person;
'Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake
That virtue must go through. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.
The rebels maintained the fight for a small time, and for their persons shewed no want of courage. Bacon.

5. A general loose term for a human being; one; a man.
Be a person's attainments ever so great, he should always remember, that he is God's creature. Clarissa.

6. One's self; not a representative.
When I purposed to make a war by my lieutenant, I made declaration thereof to you by my chancellor; but now that I mean to make a war upon France in person, I will declare it to you myself. Bacon's Henry VII.

The king in person visits all around,
Comforts the sick, congratulates the found,
And holds for thrice three days a royal feast. Dryden.

7. Exterior appearance.
For her own person,
It beggar'd all description. Shakespeare.

These tables Cicero pronounced under the person of Crassus, were of more use and authority than all the books of the philosophers. Baker's Reflections on Learning.

9. Character.
From his first appearance upon the stage, in his new person of a prince, or a sycophant or juggler, instead of his former prince,

PER

prince, he was exposed to the derision of the courtiers and the common people, who flocked about him, that one might know where the owl was, by the flight of birds. Bacon.

He hath put on the person not of a robber and a murderer, but of a traitor to the state. Hayward.

10. Character of office.
I then did use the person of your father;
The image of his power lay then in me:
And in th' administration of his laws,
While I was busy for the commonwealth,
Your highness pleased to forget my place. Shakespeare.
How different is the same man from himself, as he sustains the person of a magistrate and that of a friend. South.

11. [In grammar.] The quality of the noun that modifies the verb.
Dorus the more blushed at her smiling, and she the more smiled at his blushing; because he had, with the remembrance of that plight he was in, forgot in speaking of himself the third person. Sidney.
If speaking of himself in the first person singular has so various meanings, his use of the first person plural is with greater latitude. Locke.

PERSONABLE. adj. [from person.]
1. Handsome; graceful; of good appearance.
Were it true that her son Ninias had such a stature, as that Simiramis, who was very personable, could be taken for him; yet it is unlikely that she could have held the empire forty-two years after by any such subtilty. Raleigh.

2. [In law.] One that may maintain any plea in a judicial court. Ansforth.

PERSONAGE. n. f. [personage, Fr.]
1. A considerable person; man or woman of eminence.

It is not easy to research the actions of eminent personages, how much they have been blinded by the envy of others, and what was corrupted by their own felicity. Watson.

2. Exterior appearance; air; stature.
She hath made compare
Between our statues, she hath urg'd his height;
And with her personage, her tall personage,
She hath prevail'd with him. Shakespeare.
The lord Sudley was fierce in courage, courtly in fashion, in personage stately, in voice magnificent, but somewhat empty of matter. Hayward.

3. Character assumed.
The great diversion is masking: the Venetians, naturally grave, love to give into the follies of such seasons, when disguised in a false personage. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

4. Character represented.
Some persons must be found out, already known by history, whom we may make the actors and personages of this false. Broome's View of Epic Poems.

PERSONAL. adj. [personal, Fr. personalis, Lat.]
1. Belonging to men or women, not to things; not real.
Every man so termed by way of personal difference only. Hooker, b. v. f. 13.

2. Affecting individuals or particular people; peculiar; proper to him or her; relating to one's private actions or character.
For my part,
I know no personal cause to spurn at him;
But for the general. Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.
It could not mean, that Cain as elder had a natural dominion over Abel, for the words are conditional; if thou doest well, and so personal to Cain. Locke.
Publick reproofs of sin are general, though by this they lose a great deal of their effect; but in private conversations the application may be more personal, and the proofs when so directed come home. Rogers.

3. Present; not acting by representative.
The fav'rites that the absent king
Indeputation left,
When he was personal in the Irish war. Shakespeare.

4. Exterior; corporal.
This hercock constancy determined him to desire in marriage a prince, whose personal charms were now become the least part of her character. Addison.

5. [In law.] Something moveable; something appendant to the person, as money; not real, as land.
This sin of kind not personal
But real and hereditary was. Davies.

6. [In grammar.] A personal verb is that which has all the regular modification of the three persons; opposed to impersonal that has only the third.
PERSONALITY. n. f. [from personal.] The existence or individuality of any one.
Person belongs only to intelligent agents, capable of a law, and happiness and misery: this personality extends itself beyond present existence to what is past, only by consciousness, whereby it imputes to itself past actions, just upon the same ground that it does the present. Locke.

Whom fortune with her iv'ry hand wafts to her. Shakespeare.

7. To describe. Out of use.
I am thinking, what I shall say; it must be a personating of himself; a satire against the softness of prosperity. Shakespeare.
I will drop in his way some obscure epistles
Of love, wherein, by the colour of his beard, the Shape of his leg, the manner of his gait, the Expresure of his eye, forehead and complexion,
He shall find himself most feelingly personated. Shakespeare.

PERSONATION. n. f. [from personate.] Counterfeiting of another person.
This being one of the strangest examples of a personation that ever was, it deserveth to be discovered and related at the full. Bacon's Henry VII.

PERSONIFICATION. n. f. [from personify.] Protopopœia; the change of things to persons; as, Confusion heard his voice. Milton.

TO PERSONIFY. v. a. [from person.] To change from a thing to a person.

PERSPECTIVE. n. f. [perspectiv, Fr. perspectiv, Lat.]
1. A glass through which things are viewed.
If it tend to danger, they turn about the perspective, and shew it so little, that he can scarce discern it. Denham.
It may import us in this calm, to hearken to the storms raising abroad; and by the best perspectives, to discover from what coast they break. Temple.
You hold the glass, but turn the perspective,
And farther off the less'n'd object drive. Dryden.
Faith for reason's glimmering light shall give Her immortal perspective. Prior.

2. The science by which things are ranged in picture, according to their appearance in their real situation.
Medals have represented their buildings according to the rules of perspective. Addison on Ancient Medals.

And perspectives of pleasant glades,
Where nymphs of brightest form appear. Dryden.

PERSPECTIVE. adj. Relating to the science of vision; optick; optical.
We have perspective houses, where we make demonstrations of all lights and radiations; and out of things uncoloured and transparent, we can represent unto you all several colours. Bacon.

PERSPICACIOUS. adj. [perspicax, Lat.] Quicklighted; sharp of sight.
It is as nice and tender in feeling, as it can be perspicacious and quick in seeing. South's Sermons.

PERSPICACIOUSNESS.

PER

PERSPICA'CIOUSNESS. n. f. [from perspicacius.] Quickness of sight.

PERSPICA'CITY. n. f. [from perspicacitas, Fr.] Quickness of sight. He that laid the foundations of the earth cannot be excluded the secrecy of the mountains; nor can there any thing escape the perspicacity of those eyes, which were before light, and in whose optics there is no opacity. Brown.

PERSPICU'ENCE. n. f. [from perspicuus, Lat.] The act of looking sharply.

PERSPICU'IL. n. f. [from perspicillum, Lat.] A glass through which things are viewed; an optick glass.

Let truth be
Ne'er so far distant, yet chronology,
Sharp-sighted as the eagle's eye, that can
Out-stare the broad-beam'd day's meridian,
Will have a perspicil to find her out,
And through the night of error and dark doubt,
Discern the dawn of truth's eternal ray,
As when the rosy morn buds into day. Crashaw.

The perspicil, as well as the needle, hath enlarged the habitable world.

PERSPICU'ITY. n. f. [from perspicuitas, Fr. from perspicuus.]

1. Clearness to the mind; clearness to be understood; freedom from obscurity or ambiguity.

The verses containing pieces, have not so much need of ornament as of perspicuity.

Perspicuity consists in the using of proper terms for the thoughts, which a man would have pass from his own mind into that of another's. Locke's Thoughts on Reading.

2. Transparency; translucency; diaphaneity.

As for diaphaneity and perspicuity it enjoyeth that most eminently, as having its earthy and salinous parts so exactly resolved, that its body is left imporous. Brown.

PERSPICU'OUS. adj. [from perspicuus, Latin.]

1. Transparent; clear; such as may be seen through; diaphanous; translucent; not opaque.

As contrary causes produce the like effects, so even the same proceed from black and white; for the clear and perspicuous body effecteth white, and that white a black. Peacbam.

2. Clear to the understanding; not obscure; not ambiguous.

The purpose is perspicuous even as substance, Shakesp.

Whose grossness little characters sum up.

All this is so perspicuous, so undeniable, that I need not be over industrious in the proof of it. Sprat's Sermons.

PERSPICU'OUSLY. adv. [from perspicuus.] Clearly; not obscurely.

The case is no sooner made than resolved; if it be made not enwrapped, but plainly and perspicuously. Bacon.

PERSPICU'OUSNESS. n. f. [from perspicuus.] Clearness; freedom from obscurity.

PERSPI'RABLE. adj. [from perspire.]

1. Such as may be emitted by the cuticular pores.

That this attraction is performed by effluvia, is plain and granted by most; for electricities will not commonly attract, unless they attract or become perspirable. Brown.

In an animal under a course of hard labour, aliment too vaporous or perspirable will subject it to too strong a perspiration, debility and sudden death. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. Perspiring; emitting perspiration. Not proper.

Hair cometh not upon the palms of the hands or soles of the feet, which are parts more perspirable; and children are not hairy, for that their skins are most perspirable. Bacon.

PERSPIRA'TION. n. f. [from perspire.] Excretion by the cuticular pores.

Inseparable perspiration is the last and most perfect action of animal digestion. Arbutnot on Aliments.

Let a man be ever so well persuaded of the advantages of virtue, yet, till he hunger and thirst after righteousness, his will will not be determined to any action in pursuit of this confessed great good. Locke.

Men should seriously persuade themselves, that they have here no abiding place, but are only in their passage to the heavenly Jerusalem. Wake's Preparation for Death.

PER

2. To influence by argument or expostulation. Persuasion seems rather applicable to the passions, and argument to the reason; but this is not always observed.

Philoclea's beauty not only persuaded, but so persuaded as all hearts must yield: Pamela's beauty used violence, and such as no heart could resist. Sidney.

They that were with Simon, being led with covetousness, were persuaded for money. 2 Mac. x. 20.

To sit cross-leg'd, or with our fingers pectinated, is accounted bad, and friends will persuade us from it. Brown.

I should be glad, if I could persuade him to write such another criticism on any thing of mine; for when he condemns any of my poems, he makes the world have a better opinion of them. Dryden.

3. To inculcate by argument or expostulation.

To children, afraid of vain images, we persuade confidence by making them handle and look nearer such things. Taylor.

4. To treat by persuasion. A mode of speech not in use.

Twenty merchants have all persuaded with him; But none can drive him from the envious plea Of forfeiture. Shakespeare.

PERSUA'DER. n. f. [from persuade.] One who influences by persuasion; an importunate adviser.

The earl, speaking in that imperious language wherein the king had written, did not irritate the people, but make them conceive by the haughtiness of delivery of the king's errand, that himself was the author or principal persuader of that counsel. Bacon's Henry VII.

He soon is mov'd
By such persuaders as are held upright. Daniel's Civil War.

Hunger and thirst at once,
Pow'rful persuaders! quicken'd at the scent
Of that alluring fruit, urg'd me to keen. Milton.

PERSUA'SIBLE. adj. [from persuadibilis, Lat. persuadibilis, Fr. from persuadeo, Latin.] To be influenced by persuasion.

It makes us apprehend our own interest in that obedience, makes us tractable and persuadible, contrary to that brutish stubbornness of the horse and mule, which the Psalmist reproaches. Government of the Tongue.

PERSUA'SIBLENESS. n. f. [from persuadibilis.] The quality of being flexible by persuasion.

PERSUA'SION. n. f. [from persuasio, Fr. from persuadeo, Lat.]

1. The act of persuading; the act of influencing by expostulation; the act of gaining or attempting the passions.

If't prove thy fortune, Polydore, to conquer,
For thou hast all the arts of fine persuasion,
Trust me, and let me know thy love's success. Ortug.

2. The state of being persuaded; opinion.

The most certain token of evident goodness is, if the general persuasion of all men does to account it. Hobbes.

You are a great deal abus'd in too bold a persuasion. Shakespeare.

When we have no other certainty of being in the right, but our own persuasions that we are so; this may often be but making one error the stage for another. Gov. of the Tongue.

The obedient and the men of practice shall ride upon those clouds, and triumph over their present imperfections; till persuasion pass into knowledge, and knowledge advance into assurance, and all come at length to be compleated in the beatific vision. South's Sermons.

PERSUA'SIVE. adj. [from persuadeo, Fr. from persuadeo, Lat.] Having the power of persuading; having influence on the passions.

In prayer, we do not so much respect what precepts are delivereth, touching the method of persuasive utterance in the presence of great men, as what doth most avail to our own edification in piety and godly zeal. Hobbes.

Let Martius resume his farther discourse, as well for the persuasive as for the consoling, touching the means that may conduce unto the enterprise. Bacon.

Notwithstanding the weight and fineness of the arguments to persuade, and the light of man's intellect to meet this persuasive evidence with a suitable assent, no assent followed, not were men thereby actually persuaded. South's Sermons.

PERSUA'SIVELY. adv. [from persuasive.] In such a manner as to persuade.

The serpent with me
Persuasively hath so prevail'd, that I Have also tasted. Milton.

Many who live upon their estates cannot so much as tell a story, much less speak clearly and persuasively in any business. Locke on Education.

PERSUA'SIVENESS. n. f. [from persuasive.] Influence on the passions.

An opinion of the successfulness of the work being as necessary to found a purpose of undertaking it, as either the authority of commands, or the persuasiveness of promises, or pungency of menaces can be. Flammond's Fundamentals.

The soul as it is more immediately and strongly affected by this part, so doth it manifest all its passions and pernturbations by it. Ray on the Creation.

2. Restlessness of passions.

Natures, that have much heat, and great and violent desires and pernturbations, are not ripe for action, till they have passed the meridian of their years. Bacon's Essays.

3. Disturbance; disorder; confusion; commotion.

Although the long dissensions of the two houses had had lucid intervals, yet they did ever hang over the kingdom, ready to break forth into new pernturbations and calamities. Bacon.

4. Cause of disquiet.

O politt'd pernturbation! golden care!
That keep'st the ports of slumber open wide
To many a watchful night: sleep with it now,
Yet not so found, and half so deeply sweet,
As he, whose brow with homely biggen bound,
Sleeps out the watch of night. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

5. Commotion of passions.

Restore yourselves unto your temper, fathers;
And, without pernturbation, hear me speak. Ben. Johnson.

PERTURBATION. n. f. [from perturbatio, Lat. perturbare, Fr.]

1. Cause of commotions.

PERTURBED. adj. [from perturbatus, Lat.] Bored; punched; pierced with holes. Diſt.

PERTURSION. n. f. [from pertusio, Latin.]

1. The act of piercing or punching.

The manner of opening a vein in Hippocrates's time, was by stabbing or perntusion, as it is performed in horses. Arbutnot.

2. Hole made by punching or piercing.

An empty pot without earth in it, may be put over a fruit the better, if some few

2. To pass through the whole extension.
Matter, once bereaved of motion, cannot of itself acquire it again, nor till it be struck by some other body from without, or be intrinsically moved by an immaterial self-active substance, that can penetrate and pervade it. Bentley.
What but God?
Pervades, adjuts and agitates the whole. Thomson.
PERVADION. n. f. [from pervade.] The act of pervading or passing through.
If fusion be made rather by the ingress and transursions of the atoms of fire, than by the bare propagation of that motion, with which fire beats upon the outside of the vessels, that contain the matter to be melted; both those kinds of fluidity, ascribed to salt-petre, will appear to be caused by the pervasion of a foreign body. Boyle.
PERVERSE. adj. [from pervert, Fr. perversus, Lat.]
1. Distorted from the right.
And nature breeds
Perverts, all monstrous, all prodigious things. Milton.
2. Obdurate in the wrong; stubborn; untractable.
Then for the testimony of truth hast born Universal reproach; far worse to bear
Than violence; for this was all thy care
To stand approv'd in sight of God, though worlds Judg'd thee perverse. Milton's Paradise Lost.
To so perverse a sex all grace is vain,
It gives them courage to offend again. Dryden.
3. Petulant; vexatious.
Oh gentle Romeo,
If thou dost love, pronounce it faithfully,
Or if you think I am too quickly won,
I'll frown and be perverse, and say thee nay,
So thou wilt woo: but else not for the world. Shakespeare.
PERVERSELY. adv. [from perverse.] With intent to vex; peevishly; vexatiously; spitefully; crossly; with petty malignity.
Men *perverse*ly take up pickes and displeasures at others, and then every opinion of the disliked person must partake of his fate. Decay of Piety.
Men that do not *perverse*ly use their words, or on purpose set themselves to cavil, seldom mistake the signification of the names of simple ideas. Locke.
A patriot is a dangerous post,
When wanted by his country most,
Perversion comes in evil times,
Where virtues are imputed crimes. Swift.
PERVEXION. n. f. [from perverse.]
1. Petulance; peevishness; spiteful crossness.
A wholesome tongue is a tree of life; perverfions therein is a breach in the spirit. Proverbs xv. 4.
Virtue hath some perverfions; for she will Neither believe her good, nor others ill. Donne.
He whom he wishes most, shall seldom gain
Through her perverfions; but shall see her gain'd
By a far worse. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The perverfions of my fate is such,
That he's not mine, because he's mine too much. Dryden.
When a friend in kindness tries
To shew you where your error lies,
Conviction does but more incense;
Perversion is your whole defence. Swift.
2. Perversion; corruption. Not in use.
Neither can this be meant of evil governors or tyrants; for they are often established as lawful potentates; but of some perverfions and defection in the very nation itself. Bacon.
PERVEXION. n. f. [from perverfion, Fr. from perverse.] The act of perverting; change to something worse.
Women to govern men, slaves freemen, are much in the same degree; all being total violations and perverfions of the laws of nature and nations. Bacon.
He supposes that whole reverend body are so far from disliking popery, that the hopes of enjoying the ably lands would be an effectual incitement to their perverfion. Swift.
PERVEXITY. n. f. [from perverfion, Fr. from perverse.] Pervexi- ness; crossness.
What strange perverfity is this of man!
When 'twas a crime to taste th' enlightning tree,
He could not then his hand refrain. Norris.
TO PERVERT. v. a. [from pervert, Lat. pervertit, Fr.]
1. To distort from the true end or purpose.
Instead of good they may work ill, and pervert justice to extreme injustice. Spenser's State of Ireland.
If thou seest the oppression of the poor, and violent per- verting of justice in a province, marvel not. Ecclesiast. v. 8.
If then his providence
Out of our evil seek to bring forth good,
Our labour must be to pervert that end,
And out of good still to find means of evil. Milton.
He has perverted my meaning by his glosses; and interpreted my words into blasphemy, of which they were not guilty. Dryden.

PES

- Porphyry has wrote a volume to explain this cave of the nymphs with more piety than judgment; and another person has perverted it into obscenity; and both allegorically. Brown.
2. To corrupt; to turn from the right; opposed to convert, which is to turn from the wrong to the right.
The heinous and despicable act
Of Satan, done in Paradise, and how He in the serpent had perverted Eve,
Her husband she, to taste the fatal fruit,
Was known in heav'n. Milton's Paradise Lost.
PERVERTER. n. f. [from pervert.]
1. One that changes any thing from good to bad; a corrupter.
Where a child finds his own parents his perverters, he cannot be so properly born, as damned into the world. South.
2. One who distorts any thing from the right purpose.
He that reads a prohibition in a divine law, had need be well satisfied about the sense he gives it, lest he incur the wrath of God, and be found a perverter of his law. Stillings.
PERVERTIBLE. adj. [from pervert.] That may be easily perverted.
PERVICACIOUS. adj. [from pervix, Lat.] Spitefully obdurate;
peevishly contumacious.
May private devotions be efficacious upon the mind of one of the most pervicacious young creatures! Clarissa.
PERVICACIOUSLY. adv. [from pervicacious.] With spiteful obstinacy.
PERVICACIOUSNESS. n. f. [from pervicacia, Lat. from pervicacius.]
PERVICACITY. n. f. [from pervicacia.] Spiteful obstinacy.
PERVIOUS. adj. [from pervius, Latin.]
1. Admitting passage; capable of being permeated.
The Egyptians used to say, that unknown darkness is the first principle of the world; by darkness they mean God, whose secrets are pervious to no eye. Taylor.
Leda's twins
Conspicuous both, and both in act to throw
Their trembling lances brandish'd at the foe,
Nor had they mis'd; but he to thickets fled, Conceal'd from aiming spears, not pervious to the steel. Dryden.
Those lodged in other earth, more lax and pervious, de-cayed in tract of time, and rotted at length. Woodward.
2. Pervading; permeating. This sense is not proper.
What is this little, agile, pervious fire,
This flut'ring motion which we call the mind? Prior.
PERVIOUSNESS. n. f. [from pervius.] Quality of admitting a passage.
The perviousness of our receiver to a body much more subtle than air, proceeded partly from the looser texture of that glass the receiver was made of, and partly from the enormous heat, which opened the pores of the glass. Boyle.
There will be found another difference besides that of per- viousness. Hobbes's Elements of Speech.
PERUKE. n. f. [from peruque, Fr.] A cap of false hair; a periwig.
I put him on a linen cap, and his peruke over that. Wifeman.
TO PERUKE. v. a. [from the noun.] To dress in aditious hair.
PERUKEMAKER. n. f. [from peruke and maker.] A maker of pe-rukes; a wig-maker.
PERUSAL. [from peruse.] The act of reading.
As pieces of miniature must be allowed a closer inspection, so this treatise requires application in the perusal. Woodward.
If upon a new perusal you think it is written in the very spirit of the ancients, it deserves your care, and is capable of being improved. Atterbury.
TO PERUSE. v. a. [from per and use.]
1. To read.
Peruse this writing here, and thou shalt know
The treason. Shakespeare's Richard II.
The petitions being thus prepared, do you constantly set apart an hour in a day to peruse those petitions. Bacon.
Carefully observe, whether he tastes the distinguishing per-fections or the specifick qualities of the author whom he peruses. Addison's Spectator, N° 409.
2. To observe; to examine.
I hear the enemy;
Out some light horsemen, and peruse their wings. Shakespeare.
I've perus'd her well;
Beauty and honour in her are so mingled,
That they have caught the king. Shakespeare.
Myself I then perus'd, and limb by limb Survey'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.
PERUSER. n. f. [from peruse.] A reader; examiner.
The difficulties and hesitations of every one will be according to the capacity of each peruser, and as his penetration into nature is greater or less. Woodward.
PESADE. n. f.
Pesade is a motion a horse makes in raising or lifting up his forequarters, keeping his hind legs upon the ground without stirring. Ferriar's Dict.

PESARY.

PES

- PESARY. n. f. [from pesaria, Fr.] Is an oblong form of medicine, made to thrust up into the uterus upon some extraordinary occasions.
Of cantharides he prescribes five in a pesary, cutting off their heads and feet, mixt with myrrh. Arbutnot.
PEST. n. f. [from pestis, Fr. pestis, Lat.]
1. Plague; pestilence.
Let fierce Achilles
The god propitiate, and the pest assuage. Pope.
2. Any thing mischievous or destructive.
The pest a virgin's face and bosom bears,
High on her crown a rising snake appears,
Guards her black front, and hisses in her hairs. Pope.
At her words the hellish pest Forbore. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Of all virtues justice is the best;
Valour without it is a common pest. Waller.
TO PESTER. v. a. [from pester, Fr.]
1. To disturb; to perplex; to harass; to torment.
Who then shall blame
His pester'd senses to recoil and start,
When all that is within him does condemn Itself for being there. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
He hath not fail'd to pester us with messages,
Importuning the surrender of those lands. Shakespeare.
We are pestered with mice and rats, and to this end the cat is very serviceable. Mare's Antidote against Atheism.
They did so much pester the church and grossly delude the people, that contradictions themselves altered by Rabbits were equally revered by them as the infallible will of God. South's Sermons.
A multitude of scribblers daily pester the world with their insufferable stuff. Dryden.
At home he was pester'd with noise;
Abroad was pester'd by the boys. Swift.
2. To encumber.
Fitches and pease
For pestering too much on a hovel they lay.
Confin'd and pester'd in this pinfold here,
Strive to keep up a frail and feverish being. Milton.
PESTERER. n. f. [from pester.] One that pesters or disturbs.
PESTEROUS. adj. [from pester.] Encumbering; cumbersome.
In the statute against vagabonds note the dislike the parliament had of goaling them, as that which was chargeable, pesterous, and of no open example. Bacon's Henry VII.
PESTHOUSE. n. f. [from pest and house.] An hospital for persons infected with the plague.
PESTERIOUS. adj. [from pester, Lat.]
1. Destructive; mischievous.
Such is thy audacious wickedness,
Thy lead, pesterious and diffident pranks,
The very infants prattle of thy pride. Shakespeare.
You, that have discover'd secrets, and made such pesteri- ous reports of men nobly held, must die. Shakespeare.
2. Pestilential; malignant; infectious.
It is easy to conceive how the steams of pesterious bodies taint the air, while they are alive and hot. Arbutnot.
PESTILENCE. n. f. [from pestilencia, Fr. pestilencia, Lat.] Plague; pest; contagious distemper.
The red pestilence strike all trades in Rome,
And occupations perish. Shakespeare.
When my eyes beheld Olivia first,
Methought the purg'd air of pestilence. Shakespeare.
PESTILENT. adj. [from pestilent, Fr. pestilens, Lat.]
1. Producing plagues; malignant.
Great ringing of bells in populous cities dissipated pestilent air, which may be from the concussion of the air, and not from the found. Bacon's Natural History.
To those people that dwell under or near the equator, a perpetual spring would be a most pestilent and insupportable summer. Bentley's Sermons.
2. Mischievous; destructive.
There is nothing more contagious and pestilent than some kinds of harmony; than some nothing more strong and potent unto good. Hooker, b. v. f. 38.
Hoary moulded bread the soldiers thrusting upon their spears raised against king Ferdinand, who with such corrupt and pestilent bread would feed them. Knellet.
Which president, of pestilent import,
Against thee, Henry, had been brought. Daniel.
The world abounds with pestilent books, written against this doctrine. Swift's Miscellanies.
3. In ludicrous language, it is used to exaggerate the meaning of another word.
One pestilent fine,
His beard no bigger though than thine,
Walked on before the rest. Suckling.
PESTILENTIAL. adj. [from pestilencia, Fr. pestilens, Lat.]
1. Parraking of the nature of pestilence; producing pestilence; infectious; contagious.
These with the air passing into the lungs, infect the mass of blood, and lay the foundation of pestilential fevers. Woodv.

PET

- Fire involv'd
In pestilential vapours, stench and smog. Addison.
2. Mischievous; destructive; pernicious.
If government depends upon religion, then this shews the pestilential design of those that attempt to disjoin the civil and ecclesiastical interests. South's Sermons.
PESTILENTLY. adv. [from pestilent.] Mischievously; destructively.
PESTILLATION. n. f. [from pestillum, Lat.] The act of pounding or breaking in a mortar.
The best diamonds are comminable, and so far from breaking hammers, that they submit unto pestillation, and resist not any ordinary pettle. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PESTLE. n. f. [from pestillum, Lat.] An instrument with which any thing is broken in a mortar.
What real alteration can the beating of the pestle make in any body, but of the texture of it.
Upon our vegetable food the teeth and jaws act as the pestle and mortar. Arbutnot on Aliments.
PESTLE of Pork. n. f. A gammon of bacon. Arbutnot.
PET. n. f. [This word is of doubtful etymology; from petit, Fr. or impetus, Lat. perhaps it may be derived some way from petit, as it implies only a little fume or fret.]
1. A slight passion; a slight fit of anger.
If all the world
Should in a pet of temperance feed on pulse,
Drink the clear stream, and nothing wear but freeze,
Th' all-giver would be unthankt, would be unprais'd. Milton.
If we cannot obtain every vain thing we ask, our next business is to take pet at the refusal. L'Estrange.
Life, given for noble purposes, must not be thrown up in a pet, nor whined away in love. Collier.
They cause the proud their visits to delay,
And send the godly in a pet to pray. Pope.
2. A lamb taken into the house, and brought up by hand. A cade lamb. [Probably from petit, little.] Hammer.
PETAL. n. f. [from petalum, Latin.]
Petal is a term in botany, signifying those fine coloured leaves that compose the flowers of all plants: whence plants are distinguished into monopetalous, whose flower is one continued leaf; tripetalous, pentapetalous and polypetalous, when they consist of three, five or many leaves. Quincy.
PETALOUS. adj. [from petal.] Having petals.
PETARD. n. f. [from petard, Fr. petardo, Italian.]
PETARD. n. f. [from petard.] A small engine of metal, almost in the shape of an hat, about seven inches deep, and about five inches over at the mouth: when charged with fine powder well beaten, it is covered with a madder or plank, bound down fast with ropes, running through handles, which are round the rim near the mouth of it: this petard is applied to gates or barriers of such places as are designed to be surprized, to blow them up; they are also used in countermines to break through into the enemies galleries. Military Dict.
'Tis the sport to have the engineer Hoist with his own petard. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Find all his having and his holding,
Reduc'd t' eternal noise and scolding;
The conjugal petard that tears
Down all portullices of cars. Hudibras.
PETECHIAL. adj. [from petechia, Lat.] Pestilentially spotted.
In London are many fevers with buboes and carbuncles, and many petechial or spotted fevers. Arbutnot.
PETTER-WORT. n. f. This plant differs from St. John's-wort, only in having a pyramidal seed-vessel, divided into five cells. Miller.
PETIT. adj. [French.] Small; inconsiderable.
By what small petit hints does the mind recover a vanishing notion? South's Sermons.
PETITION. n. f. [from petitio, Latin.]
1. Request; intreaty; supplication; prayer.
We must propole unto all men certain petitions incident and very material in causes of this nature. Hooker.
My next poor petition
Is, that his noble grace would have some pity
Upon my wretched women. Shakespeare.
Let my life be given at my petition, and my people at my request. Ezra vii. 3.
Thou didst choose this house to be called by thy name, and to be a house of prayer and petition for thy people. 1 Mac. vii.
2. Single branch or article of a prayer.
Then pray'd that she might still possess his heart,
And no pretending rival share a part;
This last petition heard of all her pray'r. Dryden.
TO PETITION. v. a. [from the noun.] To solicit; to supplicate.
You have petition'd all the gods
For my prosperity. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
The mother petitioned her goddes to bestow upon them the greatest gift that could be given. Addison.

PETITIONARILY.

PET

PETITIONARILY. adv. [from petitionary.] By way of begging the question.
This doth but petitionarily infer a dextrality in the heavens, and we may as reasonably conclude a right and left laterality in the ark of Noah. Bacon.

PETITIONARY. n. f. [from petition.]
1. Supplicatory; coming with petitions.
Pardon thy petitionary countrymen. Shakefp.
It is our base petitionary breath. Ben. Johnson.
That blows 'em to this greatness.
2. Containing petitions or requests.
Petitionary prayer belongeth only to such as are in themselves impotent, and stand in need of relief from others. Hooker.
I return only yes or no to questionary and petitionary epistles of half a yard long. Swift.

PETITIONER. n. f. [from petition.] One who offers a petition.
When you have received the petitions, and it will please the petitioners well to deliver them into your own hand, let your secretary first read them, and draw lines under the material parts. Bacon.
What pleasure can it be to be encumbered with dependences, thronged and surrounded with petitioners? South.
Their prayers are to the reproach of the petitioners, and to the confusion of vain desires. L'Estrange.
His woes broke out, and begg'd relief.
With tears, the dumb petitioners of grief.
The Roman matrons presented a petition to the fathers; this raised so much raillery upon the petitioners, that the ladies never after offered to direct the lawgivers of their country. Addison.

PETITORY. adj. [from petitorius, Lat. petitor, Fr.] Petitioning; claiming the property of any thing. Ans.

PETRE. n. f. [from petra, a stone.] Nitre; salt petre. See NITRE.
Powder made of impure and greasy petre, hath but a weak emission, and gives but a faint report. Brown.
The vessel was first well sealed to prevent cracking, and covered to prevent the falling in of any thing, that might unseasonably kindle the petre. Boyle.
Nitre, while it is in its native state, is called petre-falt, when refined salt-petre. Woodward.

PETRESCENT. adj. [from petrescens, Lat.] Growing stone; becoming stone.
A cave, from whose arched roof there dropped down a petrescent liquor, which oftentimes before it could fall to the ground congealed. Boyle.

PETRIFICATION. n. f. [from petrifico, Lat.]
1. The act of turning to stone; the state of being turned to stone.
Its concenter spirit has the seeds of petrification and gorgon within itself. Brown.
2. That which is made stone.
Look over the variety of beautiful shells, petrifications, ores, minerals, stones, and other natural curiosities. Chyne.

PETRIFACTIVE. [from petrifico, Lat.] Having the power to form stone.
There are many to be found, which are but the lapidescences and petrivative mutation of bodies. Brown.

PETRIFICATION. n. f. [from petrification, Fr. from petrify.] A body formed by changing other matter to stone.
In their strange petrifications, the hardening of the bodies seems to be effected principally, if not only, as in the induration of the fluid substances of an egg into a chick, by altering the disposition of their parts. Boyle.

PETRIFICK. adj. [from petrifico, Lat.] Having the power to change to stone.
The aggregated soil
Death with his mace petrified, cold and dry,
As with a trident, smote. Milton's Paradise Lost.

TO PETRIFY. v. a. [from petrifier, Fr. petra and fic, Lat.] To change to stone.
Schism is markt out by the apostle to the Hebrews, as a kind of petrifying crime, which induces induration. Decay of Piety.
Though their souls be not yet wholly petrified, yet every act of sin makes gradual approaches to it. Decay of Piety.
A few resemble petrified wood.
Full in the midst of Euclid dip at once,
And petrify a genius to a dunce. Pope.

TO PETRIFY. v. n. To become stone.
Like Niobe we marble grow,
And petrify with grief. Dryden.

PETROL. n. f. [from petrole, Fr.]
PETROLEUM. n. f. [from petrole, Fr.]
Petrol or petroleum is a liquid bitumen, black, floating on the water of springs. Woodward.

PETRONEL. n. f. [from petrinal, Fr.] A pistol; a small gun used by a horseman.
And he with petronel upheav'd,
Instead of shield the blow receiv'd,
The gun recoil'd as well it might. Hudibras.

PETTICOAT. n. f. [from petit and coat.] The lower part of a woman's dress. Watt.

What trade art thou, Fubie?—a woman's tailor, sir.—Wilt thou make as many holes in an enemy's battle, as thou hast done in a woman's petticoat? Shakespeare.
Her feet beneath her petticoat,
Like little mice, stole in and out,
As if they fear'd the light. Suckling.
It is a great compliment to the sex, that the virtues are generally shewn in petticoats. Addison.
To fifty chosen sylphs, of special note,
We trust th' important charge, the petticoat;
Oft have we known that sevenfold fence to fail,
Though stiff with hoops, and arm'd with ribs of whale. Pope's Rape of the Lock.

Love is like the painter, who, being to draw the picture of a friend having a blemish in one eye, would picture only the other side of his face. South's Sermons.
2. To represent.
All filled with these rueful spectacles of so many wretched carcasses starving, that even I, that do but hear it from you, and do picture it in my mind, do greatly pity it. Spenser.
Fond man,
See here thy picture of life. Thomson's Winter.
- TO PIDDLE. v. n. [This word is obscure in its etymology; Skinner derives it from piciolo, Italian; or petit, Fr. little; Mr. Lye thinks the diminutive of the Welsh bryta, to eat; perhaps it comes from peddle, for Skinner gives for its primitive signification, to deal in little things.]
1. To pick at table; to feed squeamishly, and without appetite.
From stomach sharp, and hearty feeding,
To piddle like a lady breeding. Swift's Miscellanies.
2. To trifle; to attend to small parts rather than to the main. Ans.
- PIDDLER. n. f. [from piddle.] One that eats squeamishly, and without appetite.
- PIE. n. f. [This word is derived by Skinner from bizean, to build, that is to build of paste; by Junius derived by contraction from pastry; if pasties, doubled together without walls, were the first pies, the derivation is easy from pie, a foot; as in some provinces, an apple pasty is still called an apple foot.]
1. Any crust baked with something in it.
No man's pie is freed
From his ambitious finger. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
Mincing of meat in pies saveth the grinding of the teeth, and therefore more nourishing to them that have weak teeth. Bacon's Natural History.
He is the very Withers of the city; they have bought more editions of his works, than would serve to lay under all their pies at a lord mayor's Christmas. Dryden.
Chuse your materials right;

To see his country sick of Pym's disease;
By Scotch invasion to be made a prey
To such  pigwidgon myrmidons as they? Cleveland.

PIL

PIKE. n. f. [picque, Fr. his snout being sharp. Skinner and Junius.]

1. The lucc or pike is the tyrant of the fresh waters: they are bred some by generation, and some not; as namely of a weed called pickerel-weed, unless Gefner be much mistaken; for he says, this weed and other glutinous matter, with the help of the sun's heat in some particular months, and in some ponds apted for it by nature, do become pikes: doubtless divers pikes are bred after this manner, or are brought into some ponds some other ways, that is past man's finding out: Sir Francis Bacon observes the pike to be the longest lived of any flesh water fish, and yet he computes it to be not usually above forty years; and others think it to be not above ten years: he is a solitary, melancholy and bold fish; he breeds but once a year, and his time of breeding or spawning is usually about the end of February, or somewhat later, in March, as the weather proves colder or warmer: and his manner of breeding is thus; a he and a she pike will usually go together out of a river into some ditch or creek, and there the spawner casts her eggs, and the melter hovers over her all the time she is casting her spawn, but touches her not.

Walton's Angler.

In a pond into which were put several fish and two pikes, upon drawing it some years afterwards there were left no fish, but the pikes grown to a prodigious size, having devoured the other fish and their numerous spawn.

Holt.

The pike the tyrant of the floods.

Pope.

2. [Pique, Fr.] A long lance used by the foot soldiers, to keep off the horse, to which bayonets have succeeded.

Beat you the drum that it speak mournfully,

Trail your steel pikes.

Shakep. Coriolanus.

Let us revenge this with our pikes, ere we become rakes; for I speak this in hunger for bread, not for revenge.

Shakep.

They closed, and locked shoulder to shoulder, their pikes they strained in both hands and therewith their buckler in the left, the one end of the pike against the right foot, the other breast-high against the enemy.

Hayward.

Dryd.

Fancy brings the vanish'd piles to view,

And builds imaginary Rome anew.

Pope's Miscellanies.

No longer shall forsaken Thames

Lament his old Whitehall in flames;

A pile shall from its ashes rise,

Fit to invade or prop the skies.

Swift's Miscellanies.

5. A hair. [pilus, Lat.]

Yonder's my lord, with a patch of velvet on's face; his left cheek is a cheek of two pile and a half, but his right cheek is worn bare.

Shakep. All's well that ends well.

6. Hair surface; nap.

Many other sorts of stones are regularly figured; the amanthus of parallel threads, as in the pile of velvet.

Grew.

7. [Pilum, Lat.] The head of an arrow.

His spear a bent,

The pile was of a horse fly's tongue,

Drayton's Nymph.

8. [Pila, Fr. pila, Italian.] One side of a coin; the reverse of cross.

Other men have been, and are of the same opinion, a man may more justifiably throw up cross and pile for his opinions, than take them up so.

Lake.

9. [In the plural, piles.] The hemorrhoids.

Wherever there is any uneasiness, solicit the humours towards that part, to procure the piles, which seldom mistake the head.

PIMP. n. f. [pinge, Fr. Skinner.] One who provides gratifications for the lust of others; a procurer; a pander.
I'm courted by all
As principal pimp to the mighty king Harry. Addison Lords keep a pimp to bring a wench;
Of men of wit are but a kind
Of panders to a vicious mind;
Who proper objects must provide
To gratify their lust of pride.
Swift
To PIMP. v. a. [from the noun.] To provide gratifications for the lust of others; to pander; to procure.
But he's possess'd with a thousand imps,
To work whose ends his madness pimps. Swift
Yet bards like these aspir'd to lasting praise,
And proudly hop'd to pimp in future days. Anonymous
PIMPANEL. n. f. [pimpernella, Latin; pimpernelle, French.] A plant.
The flower of the pimpernel consists of one leaf shaped like a wheel and cut into several segments; the point, which rises out of the empalement, is fixed like a nail in the middle of the flower, and afterwards becomes a roundish fruit, which, when ripe, opens transversely into two parts, one incumbent on the other, inclosing many angular seeds, which adhere to the placenta. Miller
PIMPLE. adj. [pimple monche, a weak man, Dutch.] Little; petty; as, a pimple thing. Skinner
PIMPLE. n. f. [pempette, Fr.] A small red pustule.
If Rosalinda is unfortunate in her mole, Nigrailla is as unhappy in a pimple. Addison's Spect.
If e'er thy gnome could spoil a grace,
Or raise a pimple on a beauteous face. Pope
PIMPLED. adj. [from pimple.] Having red pustules; full of pimples; as, his face is pimpled.
PIN. n. f. [espingle, Fr. spina, spinula, Lat. spilla, Italian; rather from pennum, low Latin. Jidore.] A short wire with a sharp point and round head, used by women to fasten their cloaths.
I'll make thee eat iron like an offridge, and swallow my sword like a great pin, ere thou and I part. Shakespeare
Whatever spirit, careless of his charge,
His post neglects, or leaves the fair at large,
Shall feel sharp vengeance soon o'ertake his sins,
Be clapt in vials, or transfixt with pins. Pope
2. Any thing inconsiderable or of little value.
Soon after comes the cruel Saracen,
In woven mail all armed warily,
And sternly looks at him, who not a pin
Does care for look of living creature's eye. Fairy Queen
His fetch is to flatter to get what he can;
His purpose once gotten, a pin for thee than. Tusser
Tut, a pin; this shall be answer'd. Shakespeare
'Tis foolish to appeal to witnesses for proof, when 'tis not a pin matter whether the fact be true or false. L'Estrange
3. A thing driven to hold parts together; a peg; a bolt.
With pins of adamant Milton's Par. Lost
And chains, they made all fast.
4. Any slender thing fixed in another body.
Bedlam beggars with roaring voices,
Sticks in their numb'd and mortified bare arms,
Pins, wooden pricks, nails, sprigs of rosemary. Shakespeare
These bullets shall rest on the pins; and there must be other pins to keep them. Wilkins
5. That which locks the wheel to the axle; a linch pin.
The central part.
Romeo is dead, the very pin of his heart cleft with the blind hautboy's butthrust. Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet
7. The pegs by which musicians intend or relax their strings.
8. A note; a strain. In low language.
A fir tree, in a vain spiteful humour, was mightily upon the pin of commending itself, and despising the bramble. L'Estr.
As the woman was upon the peevish pin, a poor body comes, while the froward fit was upon her, to beg. L'Estr.
9. A horny induration of the membranes of the eye. Hammer
Skinner seems likewise to say the same. I should rather think it an inflammation, which causes a pain like that of a pointed body piercing the eye.
With all eyes
Blind with the pin and web. Shakespeare
10. A cylindrical roller made of wood.
They drew his brownbread face on pretty gins,
And made him stalk upon two rolling pins. Corbet
11. A noxious humour in a hawk's foot. Anf.
To PIN. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To fasten with pins.
If a word or two more are added upon the chief offenders, 'tis only a paper pin'd upon the breast. Pope
Not Cynthia when her manteau's pin'd awry, E'er felt such rage. Pope
2. To fasten; to make fast.
Our gates,
Which yet seem shut, we have but pin'd with rushes;
They'll open of themselves. Shakespeare, Macbeth

P I N

3. To join; to fix.
She lifted the princefs from the earth, and so locks her in embracing, as if she would pin her to her heart. Shakespeare
If removing my consideration from the impression of the cubes to the cubes themselves, I shall pin this one notion upon every one of them, and accordingly conceive it to be really in them; it will fall out, that I allow existence to other entities, which never had any. Digby of Bodley
I've learn'd how far I'm to believe
Your pinning oaths upon your sleeve. Hudibras
They help to cozen themselves, by chusing to pin their faith on such expositors as explain the sacred scripture, in favour of those opinions that they beforehand have voted orthodox.
It cannot be imagined, that so able a man should take so much pains to pin so closely on his friend a story which, if he himself thought incredible, he could not but also think ridiculous. Locke
4. [Pinban, Sax.] To shut up; to inclose; to confine; as, in pinfold.
If all this be willingly granted by us, which are accused to pin the word of God in so narrow room, let the cause of the accused be referred to the accuser's conscience. Hobbes
PINCASE. n. f. [pin and case.] A pincushion. Anf.
PINCERS. n. f. [pincette, Fr.]
1. An instrument by which nails are drawn, or any thing is griped, which requires to be held hard.
As superstitious flesh did rot,
Amendment ready still at hand did wait,
To pluck it out with pincers fiery hot,
That soon in him was left no one corrupt jot. Fa. Queen
2. The claw of an animal.
Every ant brings a small particle of that earth in her pincers, and lays it by the hole. Addison's Guardian
To PINCH. v. a. [pincer, Fr.]
1. To squeeze between the fingers, or with the teeth.
When the doctor spies his vantage ripe,
To pinch her by the hand, Shakespeare
The maid hath given consent to go with him.
2. To hold hard with an instrument.
3. To squeeze the flesh till it is pained or livid.
Thou shalt be pinch'd
As thick as honey-combs, each pinch more stinging Than bees that made them. Shakespeare's Tempest
He would pinch the children in the dark so hard, that he left the print in black and blue. Arbutnot's Hist. of J. Bull.
4. To press between hard bodies.
5. To gall; to fret.
As they pinch one another by the disposition, he cries out, no more. Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra
6. To gripe; to oppress; to straiten.
Want of room upon the earth pinching a whole nation, begets the remediless war, vexing only some number of particulars, it draws on the arbitrary. Ralegh's Essay
She pinch'd her belly with her daughter's too, Dryden
To bring the year about with much ado.
Nic. Frog would pinch his belly to save his pocket. Art.
7. To distress; to pain.
Avoid the pinching cold and forching heat. Milton
Afford them shelter from the wintry winds.
As the sharp year pinches. Thomson's Autumn
8. To press; to drive to difficulties.
The beaver, when he finds himself hard pinch'd, bites 'em off, and by leaving them to his pursuers, saves himself. L'Estrange
When the respondent is pinched with a strong objection, and is at a loss for an answer, the moderator suggests some answer to the objection of the opponent. Watts
9. To try thoroughly; to force out what is contained within.
This is the way to pinch the question; therefore, let what will come of it, I will stand the test of your method. Callier
To PINCH. v. n.
1. To act with force, so as to be felt; to bear hard upon; to be puzzling.
A difficulty pincheth, nor will it easily be resolved. Glanv.
But thou
Know'st with an equal hand to hold the scale,
See'st where the reasons pinch, and where they fail. Dryd.
2. To spare; to be frugal.
There is that waxeth rich by his wariness and pinching. Ecclus. xi. 18.
The poor that scarce have wherewithal to eat,
Will pinch and make the singing boy a treat. Dryden
The bounteous player outgave the pinching lord. Dryden
PINCH. n. f. [pinçon, French, from the verb.]
1. A painful squeeze with the fingers.
If any straggler from his rank be found,
A pinch must for the mortal sin compound. Dryden
2. A gripe; a pain given.
There cannot be a pinch in death Shakespeare, Cymbeline
More sharp than this is.

3. Oppression;

P I N

3. Oppression; distress inflicted.
Return to her: no, rather I chuse
To be a comrad with the wolf and owl, Necessity's sharp pinch. Shakespeare, King Lear
A farmer was put to such a pinch in a hard winter, that he was forced to feed his family upon the main stock. L'Estr.
4. Difficulty; time of distress.
A good sure friend is a better help at a pinch, than all the stratagems of a man's own wit. Bacon
The devil helps his servants for a season; but when they come once to a pinch, he leaves 'em in the lurch. L'Estrange
The commentators never fail him at a pinch, and must excuse him. Dryden
They at a pinch can bribe a vote. Swift's Miscellanies PINCHEST. n. f. [pinch, st, and penny.] A miser. Anf.
PINCUSHION. n. f. [pin and cushion.] A small bag stuffed with bran or wool on which pins are stuck.
She would ruin me in silks, were not the quantity, that goes to a large pincushion, sufficient to make her a gown and petticoat. Addison's Guardian, N° 271.
Thou art a retailer of phrases, and dost deal in remnants of remnants, like a maker of pincushions. Congreve
PINDUST. n. f. [pin and dust.] Small particles of metal made by cutting pins.
The little parts of pindust, when mingled with sand, cannot, by their mingling, make it lighter. Digby
PINE. n. f. [pinus, Lat. pin, French.]
The pine-tree hath amentaceous flowers or katkins, which are produced, at remote distances from the fruit, on the same tree; the seeds are produced in squamous cones: to which should be added, that the leaves are longer than those of a fir-tree, and are produced by pairs out of each sheath. Miller
You may as well forbid the mountain pinus
To wag their high tops, and to make a noise,
When they are fretted with the gusts of heaven. Shakespeare
Thus droops this lofty pine, and hangs his sprays;
Thus Eleanor's pride dies in her younger days. Shakespeare Go forth unto the mount, and fetch pine-branches. Nebem.
To PINE. v. a. [piman, Sax. pijen, Dutch.]
1. To languish; to wear away with any kind of misery.
My hungry eyes through greedy covetise,
With no contentment can themselves suffice;
But having pine, and having not, complain. Spenser
I burn, I pine, I perish,
If I achieve not this young modest girl. Shakespeare
Since my young lady's going into France, the fool hath much pin'd away. Shakespeare, King Lear
See, see the pinning malady of France,
Behold the most unnatural wounds,
Which thou thyself hast giv'n her woful breast. Shakespeare
Ye shall not mourn, but pine away for your iniquities. Ezekiel xxiv. 23.
The wicked with anxiety of mind
Shall pine away; in sighs consume their breath. Sandys
To me who with eternal famine pine, Alike is hell, or paradise, or heav'n. Milton's Par. Lost
Farewell the year, which threaten'd so
The fairest light the world can show;
Welcome the new, whose ev'ry day,
Restoring what was snatch'd away
By pinning sickness from the fair,
That matchless beauty does repair.
This night shall see the gaudy wreath decline,
The roses wither, and the lilies pine. Waller
2. To languish with desire.
We may again
Free from our feasts and banquets bloody knives,
Do faithful homage and receive free honours:
All which we pine for. Shakespeare, Macbeth
We stood amaz'd to see your mistress mourn, Unknowing that she pin'd for your return. Dryden
Your new commander need not pine for action. Philips
To PINE. v. n.
1. To wear out; to make to languish.
Part us; I towards the north,
Where shivering cold and sickness pinus the clime. Shakespeare
Beroc pin'd with pain,
Her age and anguish from these rites detain.
Thus tender Spencer liv'd, with mean repast
Content, depress'd with penury, and pin'd
In foreign realm: yet not debas'd his verse. Philips
2. To grieve for; to bemoan in silence.
Abash'd the devil stood,
Virtue in her shape how lovely, saw; and pin'd
His loss. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv.
PINEAPPLE. n. f.
The pineapple hath a flower consisting of one leaf, divided into three parts, and is funnel-shaped: the embryos are produced in the tubercles: these become a fleshy fruit full of

P I N

juice: the seeds, which are lodged in the tubercles, are very small and almost kidney-shaped. Miller
Try if any words can give the taste of a pineapple, and make one have the true idea of its relish. Locke
If a child were kept where he never saw but black and white, he would have no more ideas of scarlet, than he that never tasted a pineapple, has of that particular relish. Locke
PINEAL. adj. [pinale, Fr.] Resembling a pineapple. An epithet given by Des Cartes from the form, to the gland which he imagined the seat of the soul.
Courtiers and spaniels exactly resemble one another in the pineal gland. Arbutnot and Pope
PINEFEATHERED. adj. [pin and feather.] Not fledged; having the feathers yet only beginning to shoot.
We see some raw pinfeather'd thing
Attempt to mount, and fights and heroes sing;
Who for false quantities was whipt at school. Dryden
PINFOLD. n. f. [pinban, Sax. to shut up, and fold.] A place in which beasts are confined.
The Irish never come to those raths but armed; which the English nothing suspecting, are taken at an advantage, like sheep in the pinfold. Spenser on Ireland
I care not for thee.—
—If I had thee in Lipsbury pinfold, I would make thee care for me. Shakespeare, King Lear Confin'd and peffer'd in this pinfold here,
Strive to keep up a frail and feverish being. Milton
Oaths were not purpos'd more than law
To keep the good and just in awe,
But to confine the bad and sinful,
Like moral cattle in a pinfold. Hudibras
PINGLE. n. f. A small cleft; an inclosure. Anf.
PINMONEY. n. f. [pin and money.] Money allowed to a wife for her private expences without account.
The woman must find out something else to mortgage, when her pinmoney is gone. Addison's Guardian
PINGUID. adj. [pinguis, Lat.] Fat; unctuous. Little used.
Some clays are more pinguid, and other more slippery; yet all of them are very tenacious of water on the surface. Mortimer's Husbandry
PINHOLE. n. f. [pin and hole.] A small hole, such as is made by the perforation of a pin.
The breast at first broke in a small pinhole. Wifeman
PINION. n. f. [pinion, Fr.]
1. The joint of the wing remotest from the body.
2. Shakespeare seems to use it for a feather or quill of the wing.
He is plucked, when hither
He sends so poor a pinion of his wing. Shakespeare
3. Wing.
How oft do they with golden pinions cleave
The flitting skies, like flying pursuivant. Fairy Queen
The God, who mounts the winged winds,
Fast to his feet the golden pinions binds,
That high through fields of air his flight sustain. Pope
Though fear should lend him pinions like the wind,
Yet swifter fate will seize him from behind. Swift
4. The tooth of a smaller wheel, answering to that of a larger.
5. Fetters for the hands.
To PINION. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To bind the wings.

2. To confine by binding the wings.
3. To bind the arm to the body.
A second spear sent with equal force,
His right arm pierc'd, and holding on, bereft
His use of both, and pinion'd down his left. Dryden
4. To confine by binding the elbows to the sides.
Swarming at his back the country cry'd,
And seiz'd and pinion'd brought to court the knight. Dryden
5. To shackle; to bind.
Knows, that I will not wait pinion'd at your master's court;
rather make my country's high pyramids my gibbet, and hang me up in chains. Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra
You are not to go loose any longer, you must be pinion'd. Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor
O loose this frame, this knot of man unite!
That my free soul may use her wings,
Which now is pinion'd with mortality,
As an entangled, hamper'd thing,
In vain from chains and fetters free,
The great man boasts of liberty;
He's pinion'd up by formal rules of state. Norris
6. To bind to.
A heavy lord shall hang at ev'ry wit;
And while on fame's triumphant car they ride,
Some slave of mine be pinion'd to their side. Dunciad
PINK.

 Drawn from the North, to jury's hollow'd plains;
 Piously valiant. Philips.
 This martial present piously design'd,
 The loyal city give their best-lov'd king. Dryden.
 Let freedom never perish in your hands!
 But piously transmit it to your children. Addison's Cat.
PIP. n. f. [pippe, Dutch; pepie, Fr. deduced by Skinner from pituita; but probably coming from pipio or pipilo, on account of the complaining cry.]
 1. A defluxion with which fowls are troubled; a horny pellicle that grows on the tip of their tongues.
 When murrain reigns in hogs or sheep,
 And chickens languish of the pip. Hudibras.
 A spiteful vexatious giply died of the pip. L'Estrange.
 2. A spot on the cards. I know not from what original, unless from pip, painting; in the country, the pictured or court cards are called pips.
 When our women fill their imaginations with pips and counters, I cannot wonder at a new-born child, that was marked with the five of clubs. Addison's Guardian.
 To PIP. v. a. [pipio, Lat.] To chirp or cry as a bird.
 It is no unrequited thing to hear the chick pip and cry in the eggs, before the shell be broken.
PIPE. n. f. [pit, Welsh; pipe, Saxon.]
 1. Any long hollow body; a tube.
 The veins unfill'd, our blood is cold, and then
 We powt upon the morning, are unapt
 To give or to forgive; but when we've stuff'd
 These pipes, and these conveyances of blood
 With wine and feeding, we have suppler souls. Shakespeare.
 The part of the pipe, which was lowermost, will become higher; so that water ascends by descending. Wilkins.
 It has many springs breaking out of the sides of the hills, and vast quantities of wood to make pipes of. Addison.
 An animal, the nearer it is to its original, the more pipe it hath, and as it advanceth in age, still fewer. Arbutnot.
 2. A tube of clay through which the fume of tobacco is drawn into the mouth.
 Try the taking of fumes by pipes, as in tobacco and other things, to dry and comfort. Bacon's Natural History.
 His ancient pipe in fable dy'd,
 And half unsmok'd lay by his side. Swift.
 My husband's a sot,
 With his pipe and his pot. Swift.
 3. An instrument of hand music.
 I have known, when there was no musick with him but the drum and the fife, and now had he rather hear the tabor and the pipe. Shakespeare.
 The solemn pipe and dulcimer.
 The shrill found of a small rural pipe,
 Was entertainment for the infant stage. Rowe's Roman.
 There is no reason, why the found of a pipe should leave traces in their brains. Loki.
 4. The organs of voice and respiration; as, the wind-pipe.
 The exercise of singing openeth the breast and pipe. Pope.
 5. The key of the voice.
 My throat of war be turn'd,
 Which quired with my drum, into a pipe. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
 Small as an enuch.
 6. An office of the exchequer.
 That office of her majesty's exchequer, we, by a metaphor, call the pipe, because the whole receipt is finally conveyed into it by the means of divers small pipes or quills, as water into a cistern. Bacon.

7. [Pip]

PIQ

7. [Pep, Dutch; pipe, Fr.] A liquid measure containing two hogheads.
 I think I shall drink in pipe wine with Falstaff; I'll make him dance. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.
 To PIPE. v. n. [from the noun.]
 1. To play on the pipe.
 Merry Michael the Cornish poet pip'd thus upon his oaten pipe for merry England. Camden's Remains.
 We have pip'd unto you, and you have not danced. Mat. Dryden.
 In fingings, as in pipings, you excel.
 Gaming goats, and fleecy flocks,
 And lowing herds, and pipings twains,
 Come dancing to me. Swift.
 2. To have a shrill sound.
 His big manly voice,
 Turning again toward childish treble, pip'd. Shakespeare. As You like it.
 And whistles in his found. Shakespeare. As You like it.

 Pipers and trumpeters shall be heard no more in thee. Rev.
PIPERY. n. f. The lilac tree.
PIPERY. n. f. [from pipe.] This word is only used in low language.
 1. Weak; feeble; sickly: from the weak voice of the flick.
 I, in this weak piping time of peace,
 Have no delight to pass away the time,
 Unless to spy my shadow in the sun. Shakespeare.
 2. Hot; boiling: from the found of any thing that boils.
PIPKIN. n. f. [diminutive of pipe, a large vessel.] A small earthen boiler.
 A pipkin there like Homer's tripod walks:
 Some officer might give consent. Pope.
 To a large cover'd pipkin in his tent. King.
PIPPIN. n. f. [pyppynghes, Dutch. Skinner.] A sharp apple.
 Pippins take their name from the small spots or pips that usually appear on the sides of them: some are called stone pippins from their obduracy; some Kentish pippins, because they agree well with that soil; others French pippins, having their original from France, which is the best bearer of any of these pippins; the Holland pipkin and the russet pippins from its russet hue; but such as are distinguished by the names of grey and white pippins are of equal goodness: they are generally a very pleasant fruit and of good juice, but slender bearers.
 You shall see mine orchard, where, in an arbour, we will eat a last year's pipkin of my own grafting. Shakespeare.
 At supper entertain yourself with a pipkin roasted. Harvey.
 The story of the pipkin-woman, I look upon as fabulous. Addison's Spectator, No 247.
 Or midst those thund'ring spears an orange grace. King.
 This pipkin shall another trial make;
 See from the core two kernels brown I take. Gay.
PIQUANT. adj. [piquant, French.]
 1. Picking; piercing; stimulating.
 There are vast mountains of a transparent rock extremely solid, and as piquant to the tongue as salt. Addison on Italy.
 2. Sharp; tart; pungent; severe.
 Some think their wits asleep, except they dart out somewhat that is piquant, and to the quick: that is a vein that would be bridled; and men ought to find the difference between falness and bitterness. Bacon's Essays.
 Men make their raileries as piquant as they can to wound the deeper. Government of the Tongue.
PIQUANCY. n. f. [from piquant.] Sharpness; tartness.
PIQUANTLY. adv. [from piquant.] Sharply; tartly.

 Now shall the ocean, as thy Thames, be tree, Waller.
 From both those fates of storms and piracy.
 Fame swifter than your winged navy flies;
 Sounding your name, and telling dreadful news
 To all that piracy and rapine use. Waller.
 His pretence for making war upon his neighbours was their piracies; though he practised the same trade. Arbutnot.
PIRATE. n. f. [pirata, Lat. pirate, Fr.]
 1. A sea-robber.
 Wrangling pirates that fall out
 In shaming that which you have pill'd from me. Shakespeare.
 Pirates all nations are to prosecute, not so much in the right of their own fears, as upon the band of human society. Bacon.
 Relate, if business or the thirst of gain Engage your journey o'er the pathless main,
 Where savage pirates seek through seas unknown
 The lives of others, vent'rous of their own. Pope.
 2. Any robber; particularly a bookfeller who seizes the copies of other men.
 To PIRATE. v. n. [from the noun.] To rob by sea.
 When they were a little got out of their former condition, they robbed at land and pirated by sea. Arbutnot.

riment, which we have all the reason imaginable to think God will not suffer to take place. Atterbury's Sermons.
11. Rank; order of priority.
The heavens themselves, the planets, and this center
Observe degree, priority and place. Shakespeare.
12. Precedence; priority. This sense is commonly used in the phrase take place.
Do you think I'd walk in any plot,
Where Madam Sempronie should take place of me,
And Fulvia come i' the rear. Ben Jonson's Catiline.
There would be left no measures of credible and incredible, if doubtful propositions take place before self-evident. Locke.
As a British freholder, I should not scruple taking place of a French marquis. Addison's Freeholder.
13. Office; public character or employment.
Do you your office, or give up your place,
And you shall well be spared. Shakespeare.
If I'm traduc'd by tongues that neither know
My faculties nor person;
'Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake
That virtue must go through. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.

To PLACE. v. a. [placer, Fr. from the noun.]
1. To put in any place, rank or condition.
Place such over them to be rulers. Ex. xviii. 21.
He placed forces in all the fenced cities. 2 Chron. xvii. 2.
Those accusations had been more reasonable, if placed on inferior persons. Dryden's Aeneas.
2. To fix; to settle; to establish.
God or nature has not any where placed any such jurifdiction in the first born. Locke.
3. To put out at interest.
'Twas his care
To place on good security his gold. Pope.
PLACER. n. f. [from place.] One that places.
Sovereign lord of creatures all,
Thou placer of plants, both humble and tall. Spenser.
PLACID. adj. [placidus, Latin.]
1. Gentle; quiet; not turbulent.
It conduceth unto long life and to the more placid motion of the spirits, that men's actions be free. Bacon.
2. Soft; kind; mild.
That placid aspect and meek regard,
Rather than aggravate my evil state,
Would stand between me and thy father's ire. Milton.
PLACIDLY. adv. [from placid.] Mildly; gently.
If into a phial, filled with good spirit of nitre, you cast a piece of iron, the liquor, whose parts moved uniformly and placidly before, by altering its motion, it begins to penetrate and scatter abroad particles of the iron. Boyle.
The water easily infiltrates itself into, and placidly diffends the tubes and vessels of vegetables. Wardour.
PLACIDITY. n. f. [placidity, Lat.] Decree; determination.
We spend time in defence of their placidity, which might have been employed upon the universal author. Glanvill.
PLACQUET, or PLAQUET. n. f. A petticoat.
You might have pinch'd a placquet, it was senseless. Shak.
The bone-ach is the curse dependent on those that war for a placquet. Shakespeare. Troilus and Cressida.
PLAGIARISM. n. f. [from plagiary.] Theft; literary adoption of the thoughts or works of another.
With great impropriety, as well as plagiarism, they have most injuriously been transferred into proverbial maxims. Stei.
PLAGIARY. n. f. [from plagium, Lat.]
1. A thief in literature; one who steals the thoughts or writings of another.
The ensuing discourse, left I chance to be traduced for a plagiary by him who has played the thief, was one of those that, by a worthy hand, were stolen from me. South.
Without invention, a painter is but a copier, and a poet but a plagiary of others; both are allowed sometimes to copy and translate. Dryden's Dives.
2. The crime of literary theft. Not used.
Plagiary had not its nativity with printing, but began when the paucity of books scarce wanted that invention. Brown.
PLAGUE. n. f. [plague, Dutch; plage, Teut. plaga, Latin;
πλῆγη.]
1. Pestilence; a disease eminently contagious and destructive.
Thou art a bile,
A plague-fore or imbold's carbuncle
In my corrupted blood. Shakespeare. King Lear.
The general opinion is, that years hot and moist are most pestilential; yet many times there have been great plagues in dry years. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

- PLACE. n. f. [place, Fr. piazza, Italian; from platea, Lat.]
1. Particular portion of space.
Search you out a place to pitch your tents. Deut. i. 33.
We accept it always and in all places. Acts xxiv. 3.
Here I could frequent
With worship, place by place, where he vouchsaf'd Preference divine. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.
I will teach him the names of the most celebrated persons;
who frequent that place. Addison's Guardian, N° 107.
2. Locality; vicinity; local relation.
Place is the relation of distance betwixt any thing, and any two or more points considered as keeping the same distance one with another; and so as at rest: it has sometimes a more confused sense, and stands for that space which any body takes up. Locke.
3. Local existence.
The earth and the heaven fled away, and there was found no place for them. Revelations xx. 11.
4. Space in general.
All bodies are confin'd within some place;
But the all place within herself confines. Davies.
5. Separate room.
In his brain
He hath strange places cram'd with observation. Shakespeare.
6. A seat; residence; mansion.

Saul set him up a place, and is gone down to Gilgal. 1 Sam.
7. Passage in writing.
Holea faith of the Jews, they have reigned, but not by me;
which place proveth, that there are governments which God doth not avow. Bacon's Holy War.
I could not pass by this place, without giving this short explication. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
8. Ordinal relation.
What scripture doth plainly deliver, to that the first place
both of credit and obedience is due. Hooker, b. v. f. 8.
Let the eye be satisfied in the first place, even against all other reasons, and let the compass be rather in your eyes than in your hands. Dryden's Dives.
We shall extinguish this melancholy thought, of our being overlooked by our maker, if we consider, in the first place, that he is omnipresent; and, in the second, that he is omniscient. Spelman, N° 565.
9. Existence; state of being; validity; state of actual operation.
I know him a notorious liar;
Think him a great way fool, solely a coward;
Yet these fix'd evils fit to fit in him,
That they take place, when virtue's steely bones
Look bleak in the cold wind. Shakespeare.
These fair overtures, made by men well esteem'd for honest dealing, could take no place. Hayward.
They are defects, not in the heart, but in the brain; for Sometimes my plague, sometimes my darling. Prior.

To PLAGUE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To infect with pestilence.
2. To trouble; to tease; to vex; to harass; to torment; to afflict; to distress; to torture; to embarrass; to excruciate;
to make uneasy; to disturb.
If her nature be so,
That she will plague the man that loves her most,
And take delight to encrease a wretch's woe,
Then all her nature's goodly gifts are lost. Spenser.
Say my request's unjust,
And spurn me back; but if it be not so,
Thou art not honest, and the gods will plague thee. Shak.
Thus were they plagu'd. Milton.
And worn with famine. Collier.
People are formed out of their reason, plagued into a compliance, and forced to yield in their own defence. Collier.
When a Neapolitan cavalier has nothing else to do, he gravely shuts himself up in his closet, and falls a tumbling over his papers, to see if he can start a law suit, and plague any of his neighbours. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

PLAGU'LY. adv. [from plague.] Vexatiously; horribly. A low word.
This whispering bodes me no good; but he has me so pla- guily under the lash, I dare not interrupt him. Dryden.
You look'd scornful, and snift at the dean;
But he durst not so much as once open his lips,
And the doctor was plaguily down in the hips. Swift.

PLAGU'Y. adj. [from plague.] Vexatious; troublesome. A low word.
Of heats,
Add one more to the plaguey bill. Dennis.
What perils do environ
The man that meddles with cold iron,
What plaguey mischiefs and mishaps
Do dog him still with after-claps. Hudibras.

PLAICE. n. f. [plate, Dutch.] A flat fish.
Of flat fish there are soles, flounders, dabs and plaice. Carew.

PLAID. n. f. A striped or variegated cloth; an outer loose weed worn much by the highlanders in Scotland: there is a particular kind worn too by the women; but both these modes seem now nearly extirpated among them; the one by act of parliament, and the other by adopting the English dresses of the sex.

PLAIN. adj. [planus, Latin.]
1. Smooth; level; flat; free from protuberances or excrefcencies. In this sense, especially in philosophical writings, it is frequently written plane: as, a plane superficies.
It was his policy to leave no hold behind him; but to make all plain and waste. Spenser.
The South and South-East sides are rocky and mountainous, but plain in the midst. Sandys's Journey.
Thy vineyard must employ thy sturdy steer
To turn the glebe; besides thy daily pain
To break the clods, and make the surface plain. Dryden.
Hilly countries afford the most entertaining prospects, though a man would chuse to travel through a plain one. Add.

2. Void of ornament; simple.
A crown of ruddy gold inclos'd her brow,
Plain without pomp, and rich without a show. Dryden.

3. Artless; not subtle; not specious; not learned; simple.
In choice of instruments, it is better to chuse men of a plain sort, that are like to do that that is committed to them, and to report faithfully the success, than those that are cunning to contrive somewhat to grace themselves, and will help the matter in report. Bacon's Essays.
Of many plain, yet pious christians, this cannot be affirmed. Hammond's Fundamentals.
The experiments alledged with so much confidence, and told by an author that writ like a plain man, and one whose profession was to tell truth, helped me to resolve upon making the trial. Temple.
My heart was made to fit and pair within,
Simple and plain, and fraught with artless tenderness. Rowe.
Our troops beat an army in plain fight and open field. Felt.
Must then at once, the character to save,
The plain rough hero turn a crafty knave? Pope.

4. Honestly rough; open; sincere; not soft in language.
Give me leave to be plain with you, that yourself give no just cause of scandal. Bacon.

5. Mere; bare.
He that beguill'd you in a plain accents was a plain knave, which, for my part, I will not be. Shakespeare, King Lear.
Some have at first for wits, then poets part;
Turn'd critics next, and prov'd plain fools at last. Pope.

6. Evident; clear; discernible; not obscure.
They wondered there should appear any difficulty in any expressions, which to them seem'd very clear and plain. Clar.
Express thyself in plain, not doubtful words.
That ground for quarrels or disputes affords. Denham.
I can make the difference more plain, by giving you my method of proceeding in my translations; I considered the genius and distinguishing character of my author. Dryden.
'Tis plain in the history, that Esau was never subject to Jacob. Lake.
That children have such a right, is plain from the laws of God; that men are convinced, that children have such a right, is evident from the law of the land. Lake.
It is plain, that these discourses are calculated for none, but the fashionable part of womankind. Addison's Spectator.
To speak one thing mix'd dialects they join;
Divide the simple, and the plain define. Prior.

7. Not varied by much art.
A plain long plain-singing voice requires,
For warbling notes from inward cheering flow. Sidney.

PLAIN. adv.
1. Not obscurely.
2. Distinctly; articulately.
The string of his tongue was loosed, and he spake plain.
Mar. vii. 35.

3. Simply; with rough sincerity.
Goodman Fact is allowed by every body to be a plain- spoken person, and a man of very few words; tropes and figures are his aversion. Addison's Court Tatler.

PLAIN. n. f. [plaine, Fr.] Level ground; open; flat; often, a field of battle.
In a plain in the land of Shinar they dwell. Gen. xi. 2.

ving his guard of pioneers to plain the ways. Hayward.

To PLAIN. v. n. [plaindre, je plain, Fr.] To lament; to wail.
Long since my voice is hoarse, and throat is sore,
With cries to skies, and curses to the ground;
But more I plain, I feel my woes the more. Sidney.
A plain long plain-singing voice requires
For warbling notes from inward cheering flow. Sidney.
The fox, that first this cause of grief did find,
'Can first thus plain his case with words unkind. Habbert.
The incessant weeping of my wife,
And piteous plainings of the pretty babes,
Forc'd me to seek delays. Shakespeare.
He to himself thus plain'd. Milton.

PLAINDEALING. adj. [plain and deal.] Acting without art.
Though I cannot be laid to be a flattering honest man; it must not be denied, but I am a plaindealing villain. Shakespeare.
Bring a plaindealing innocence into a consilium with necessary prudence. L'Estrange.

PLAINDEALING. n. f. Management void of art.
I am no politician; and was ever thought to have too little wit, and too much plaindealing for a statesman. Denham.
It looks as fate with nature's law may strive
To shew plaindealing once an age would thrive. Dryden.

PLAINLY. adv. [from plain.]
1. Levelly; flatly.
2. Not subtly; not speciously.
3. Without ornament.
4. Without gloss; sincerely.
You write to me with the freedom of a friend, setting down your thoughts as they occur, and dealing plainly with me in the matter. Pope.

5. In earnest; fairly.
They charged the enemies horse so gallantly, that they gave ground; and at last plainly run to a safe place. Clarend.

6. Evidently; clearly; not obscurely.
St. Augustine acknowledgeth, that they are not only set down, but also plainly set down in scripture; so that he which heareth or readeth, may without difficulty understand. Hester.
Coriolanus neither cares whether they love or hate him;
and out of his carelessness, let's them plainly see't. Shakespeare.

Where though I mourn my matchless loss alone,
And none between my weakness judge and me;
Yet even these gentle walls allow my moan,
Whose doleful echoes to my plaints agree. Watton.
Littering where the hapless pair
Sat in their sad discourse, and various plaints, Thence gather'd their own doom. Milton's Par. Lost.
For her relief
Vext with the long expressions of my grief, Receive these plaints. Waller.

PLAINFUL. adj. [plaint and full.] Complaining; audibly sorrowful.
To what a sea of miseries my plaintful tongue doth lead me. Sidney, b. ii.

PLAINTIF. n. f. [plaintif, Fr.] He that commences a suit in law against another; opposed to the defendant.
The plaintiff proved the debt by three positive witnesses, and the defendant was cast in costs and damages. L'Estrange.
You and I shall talk in cold friendship at a bar before a judge, by way of plaintiff and defendant. Dryden.
In such a cause the plaintiff will be his'd,
My lord, the judges laugh, and you're dismiss'd. Pope.

PLAINTIF. adj. [plaintif, Fr.] Complaining. A word not guished from embroidery; the common practice of sewing or making linen garments.

She went to plainwork, and to purling brooks. Pope.

PLAIT. n. f. [corrupted from plight or plyght, from ply or fold.]
A fold; a double.
Should the voice directly strike the brain,
It would astonish and confuse it much;
Therefore these plaits and folds the sound restrain.
That it the organ may more gently touch. Davies.
Nor shall thy lower garments artful plait,
From thy fair side dependent to thy feet,
Arm their chaste beauties with a modest pride,
And double ev'ry charm they seek to hide. Prior.

PLA

'Tis very difficult to trace out the figure of a vest through all the plaits and foldings of the drapery. Addison.

To PLAIT. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To fold; to double.
The busy sylphs surround their darling cares;
Some fold the sleeve, while others plait the gown;
And Betty's prais'd for labours not her own. Pope.
Will she on Sunday morn thy neckcloth plait. Gay.

2. To weave; to braid.
Let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair. 1 Peter iii. 3.

What she demands, incessant I'll prepare;
I'll weave her garlands, and I'll plait her hair;
My busy diligence shall deck her board,
For there at least I may approach my lord. Prior.

3. To intangle; to involve.
Time shall unfold what plaited cunning hides,
Who covers faults at last with shame derides. Shakespeare.

PLAITER. n. f. [from plait.] He that plaits.
PLAN. n. f. [plan, French.]
1. A scheme; a form; a model.
Remember, O my friends, the laws, the rights;
The generous plan of power delivered down
From age to age to your renown'd forefathers. Addison.

2. A plot of any building or ichnography; form of any thing laid down on paper.
Artists and plans reliev'd my solemn hours;
I founded palaces, and planted bow'rs. Prior.

To PLAN. v. a. [from the noun.] To scheme; to form in design.
Vouchsafe the means of vengeance to debate,
And plan with all thy arts the scene of fate. Pope.
PLANARY. adj. Pertaining to a plane. DiD.
PLANCHED. adj. [from planche.] Made of boards.
He hath a garden circummar'd with brick,
Whose Western side is with a vineyard back,
And to that vineyard is a planched gate,
That makes his opening with this bigger key. Shakespeare.

PLANCHER. n. f. [plancher, French.] A board; a plank.
Oak, cedar and chefnut are the best builders; some are best for planchers, as deal; some for tables, cupboards and decks, as walnuts. Bacon's Nat. History.

PLANCHING. n. f. In carpentry, the laying the floors in a building. DiD.

PLANE. n. f. [planus, Latin. Plain is commonly used in popular language, and plane in geometry.]
1. A level surface.
Comets, as often as they are visible to us, move in planes inclined to the plane of the ecliptick in all kinds of angles. Bent.
Projectils would ever move on in the same right line, did not the air, their own gravity, or the ruggedness of the planes, on which they move, stop their motion. Cheyne.

2. [Plane, Fr.] An instrument by which the surface of boards is smoothed.
The iron is set to make an angle of forty-five degrees with the sole of the plane. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

To PLANE. v. a. [planer, Fr. from the noun.]
1. To level; to smooth from inequalities.
The foundation of the Roman caufeway was made of rough stone, joined with a most firm cement; upon this was laid another layer of small stones and cement, to plane the inequalities of rough stone, in which the stones of the upper pavement were fixt. Ariantnot on Coins.

2. To smooth with a plane.
These hard woods are more properly scraped than planed.

PLANE-TREE. n. f. [platanus, Lat. plane, platane, Fr.]
The plane-tree hath an amentaceous flower, consisting of several slender stamina, which are all collected into spherical little balls and are barren; but the embryos of the fruit, which are produced on separate parts of the same trees, are turgid, and afterwards become large spherical balls, containing many oblong seeds intermixed with down: it is generally supposed, that the introduction of this tree into England is owing to the great lord chancellor Bacon. Miller.

The beech, the swimming alder and the plane. Dryd.

PLANET. n. f. [planeta, Lat. πλανητα; planet, Fr.]
Planets are the erratic or wandering stars, and which are not like the fixt ones always in the same position to one another:
we now number the earth among the primary planets, because we know it moves round the sun, as Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Venus and Mercury do, and that in a path or circle between Mars and Venus; and the moon is accounted among the secondary planets or satellites of the primary, since she moves round the earth: all the planets have, besides their motion round the sun, which makes their year, also a motion round their own axes, which makes their day; as the earth's revolving so makes our day and night: it is more than probable, that the diameters of all the planets are longer than their axes:
we know 'tis so in our earth; and Flamsteed and Cassini found it to be so in Jupiter: Sir Isaac Newton asserts our earth's equatorial diameter to exceed the other about thirty-four

PLA

four miles; and indeed else the motion of the earth would make the sea rise so high at the equator, as to drown all the parts thereof.

Barbarous villains! hath this lovely face
Rul'd like a waning planet over me;
And could it not inforce them to relent,
And planets, planet-struck, real eclipse
Then suffer'd.

There are seven planets or errant stars in the lower orbs of heaven.

PLANETARY adj. [planetaire, Fr. from planet.]

1. Pertaining to the planets.
Their planetary motions and aspects.
To marble and to brass, such features give,
Describe the stars and planetary way,
And trace the footsteps of eternal day.

2. Under the denomination of any particular planet.
Darkling they mourn their fate, whom Circe's power,
That watch'd the moon and planetary hour,
With words and wicked herbs, from human kind
Had alter'd.

I was born in the planetary hour of Saturn, and, I think,
I have a piece of that leaden planet in me; I am no way fascious.

3. Produced by the planets.
Here's gold, go on;
Be as a planetary plague, when Jove
Will o'er some high-wield city hang his poison
In the sick air.

4. Having the nature of a planet; erratic.
We behold bright planetary Jove,
Sublime in air through his wide province move;
Four second planets his dominion own;
And round him turn, as round the earth the moon.

PLANETICAL adj. [from planet.] Pertaining to planets.
Add the two Egyptian days in every month, the interlunary and plenilunary exemptions, the eclipses of sun and moon, conjunctions and oppositions planetary.

PLANETETRUCK adj. [planet and strike.] Blasted; sward afflaid.

Wonder not much if thus amaz'd I look,
Since I saw you, I have been planettruck;
A beauty, and so rare, I did desire.

PLANIFOLIOUS adj. [planus and folium, Lat.] Flowers are so called, when made up of plain leaves, set together in circular rows round the center, whose face is usually uneven, rough and jagged.

PLANIMETRIC adj. [from planimetry.] Pertaining to the mensuration of plane surfaces.

PLANIMETRY n. f. [planus, Lat. and metria, Gr.] The mensuration of plane surfaces.

PLANIPETALOUS adj. [planus, Lat. and petala, Gr.] Flatleaved, as when the small flowers are hollow only at the bottom, but flat upwards, as in dandelion and succory.

TO PLANISH v. a. [from plane.] To polish; to smooth. A word used by manufacturers.

PLANISPHERE n. f. [planus, Lat. and sphere, Gr.] A sphere projected on a plane; a map of one or both hemispheres.

PLANK n. f. [planche, Fr.] A thick strong board.
They gazed on their ships, feeling them so great, and confiding in divers planks.

The doors of plank were; their clove exquisite,
Kept with a double key.

Some Turkish bows are of that strength, as to pierce a plank of six inches.

Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find.

Be warn'd to shun the watry way,
For late I saw adrift disjointed planks,
And empty tombs erected on the banks.

TO PLANK v. a. [from the noun.] To cover or lay with planks.

If you do but plank the ground over, it will breed salt-petre.

A seed of monstrous height appear'd;
The sides were plank'd with pine.

PLANCUNICAL adj. [planus and conus.] Level on one side and conical on others.

Some few are planconvex, whose superficies is in part level between both ends.

PLANOCONVEX n. f. [planus and convexus.] Flat on the one side and convex on the other.

It took two object-glasses, the one a planconvex for a fourteen feet telescope, and the other a large double convex for one of about fifty feet.

PLANT n. f. [plant, Fr. planta, Latin.]

1. Any thing produced from seed; any vegetable production.

PLA

What comes under this denomination, Ray has distributed under twenty-seven genders or kinds: 1. The imperfect plants, which do either totally want both flower and seed, or else seem to do so. 2. Plants producing either no flower at all, or an imperfect one, whose seed is so small as not to be dis-cernible by the naked eye. 3. Those whose seeds are not so small, as singly to be invisible, but yet have an imperfect or staminate flower; i. e. such a one, as is without the petala, having only the stamina and the perianthium. 4. Such as have a compound flower, and emit a kind of white juice or milk when their stalks are cut off or their branches broken off. 5. Such as have a compound flower of a discous figure, the seed pappous, or winged with down, but emit no milk.
6. The herbæ capitatae, or such whose flower is composed of many small, long, fistulous or hollow flowers gathered round together in a round button or head, which is usually covered with a squamous or scaly coat. 7. Such as have their leaves entire and undivided into jags. 8. The corymbiferous plants, which have a compound discous flower, but the seeds have no down adhering to them. 9. Plants with a perfect flower, and having only one single seed belonging to each single flower. 10. Such as have rough, hairy or bristly seeds. 11.
The umbelliferous plants, which have a pentapetalous flower, and belonging to each single flower are two seeds, lying naked and joining together; they are called umbelliferous, because the plant, with its branches and flowers, hath an head like a lady's umbrella: [1.] Such as have a broad flat seed almost of the figure of a leaf, which are encompassed round about with something like leaves. [2.] Such as have a longish seed, swelling out in the middle, and larger than the former. [3.] Such as have a shorter seed. [4.] Such as have a tubercle root. [5.] Such as have a wrinkled, channelated or striated seed. 12. The stellate plants, which are so called, because their leaves grow on their stalks at certain intervals or distances in the form of a radiant star: their flowers are really monopetalous, divided into four segments, which look like so many petala; and each flower is succeeded by two seeds at the bottom of it. 13. The apertifolia, or rough leaved plants: they have their leaves placed alternately, or in no certain order on their stalks; they have a monopetalous flower cut or divided into five partitions, and after every flower there succeed usually four seeds. 14. The suffruticeae, or verticillate plants: their leaves grow by pairs on their stalks, one leaf right against another; their leaf is monopetalous, and usually in form of an helmet. 15. Such as have naked seeds, more than four, succeeding their flowers, which therefore they call polyspermae plantae semine nudo; by naked seeds, they mean such as are not included in any seed pod.
16. Bacciferous plants, or such as bear berries. 17. Multi-filiquous, or corniculate plants, or such as have, after each flower, many distinct, long, slender, and many times crooked cafes or filiquae, in which their seed is contained, and which, when they are ripe, open themselves and let the seeds drop out. 18. Such as have a monopetalous flower, either uniform or difform, and after each flower a peculiar seed-case containing the seed, and this often divided into many distinct cells. 19. Such as have an uniform tetrapetalous flower, but bear these seeds in oblong filiquous cafes. 20.
Vasculiferous plants, with a tetrapetalous flower, but often anomalous. 21. Leguminous plants, or such as bear pulses, with a papilionaceous flower. 22. Vasculiferous plants, with a pentapetalous flower; these have, besides the common calix, a peculiar case containing their seed, and their flower consisting of five leaves. 23. Plants with a true bulbous root, which consists but of one round ball or head, out of whose lower part go many fibres to keep it firm in the earth:
the plants of this kind come up but with one leaf; they have no foot stalk, and are long and slender: the seed vessels are divided into three partitions: their flower is hexapetalous.
24. Such as have their fruits approaching to a bulbous form:
these emit, at first coming up, but one leaf, and in leaves, flowers and roots resemble the true bulbous plant. 25. Culmiferous plants, with a grassy leaf, as such as have a smooth hollow-jointed stalk, with one sharp-pointed leaf at each joint, encompassing the stalk, and set out without any foot stalk: their seed is contained within a chaffy husk. 26. Plants with a grassy leaf, but not culmiferous, with an imperfect or stami-niferous flower. 27. Plants whose place of growth is uncertain and various, chiefly water plants.

Butchers and villains,
How sweet a plant have you untimely crop't.

Between the vegetable and sensitive province there are plant-animals and some kind of insects arising from vegetables, that seem to partake of both.

The next species of life above the vegetable, is that of sense; wherewith some of those productions, which we call plant-animals, are endowed.

It continues to be the same plant, as long as it partakes of the same life, though that life be communicated to new particles of matter, vitally united to the living plant, in a like continued organization, conformable to that sort of plants.

Once

PLA

Once I was skill'd in ev'ry herb that grew,
And ev'ry plant that drinks the morning dew.

2. A fapling.
A man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks.

And labour him with many a stubborn stroke.
[Plant, Lat.] The sole of the foot.

TO PLANT v. a. [planto, Lat. planter, Fr.]

1. To put into the ground in order to grow; to set; to cultivate.
Plant not thee a grove of any trees near unto the altar of the Lord.

2. To procreate; to generate.
The honour'd gods the chairs of justice
Supply with worthy men, plant love amongst you.

It engenders choler, planteth anger;
And better 'twere, that both of us did fast,
Than feed it with such overcosted flesh.

3. To place; to fix.
The fool hath planted in his memory
An army of good words.

I will advise you where to plant yourselves.
The mind through all her powers
Irradiate, there plant eyes.

When Turnus had assembled all his pow'rs,
His standard planted on Laurentum's tow'rs;
Trembling with rage, the Latian youth prepare
To join th' allies.

4. To settle; to establish: as, to plant a colony.
If you plant where favages are, do not only entertain them with trifles and jingles, but use them justly.

Create, and therein plant a generation.
To the planting of it in a nation, the soil may be mellowed with the blood of the inhabitants; nay, the old extirpated, and the new colonies planted.

5. To fill or adorn with something planted: as, he planted the garden or the country.

To build, to plant, whatever you intend,
In all let nature never be forgot.

6. To direct properly: as, to plant a cannon.
PLANTAGE n. f. [plantago, Lat.] An herb.

Truth, try'd with iteration,
As true as steel, as plantage to the moon.

PLANTAIN n. f. [plantain, Fr. plantago, Lat.]

1. An herb.
The toad, being overcharged with the poison of the spider, as is ordinarily believ'd, has recourse to the plantain leaf.

The most common simples are mugwort, plantain and horsetail.

2. A tree in the West Indies, which bears an eculent fruit.
I long my careless limbs to lay
Under the plantain's shade.

PLANTAL adj. [from plant.] Pertaining to plants.
There's but little similitude betwixt a tedious humidity and plantal germinations.

PLANTATION n. f. [plantatio, from planto, Latin.]

1. The act or practice of planting.
2. The place planted.

As swine are to gardens and orderly plantations, so are tumults to parliaments.

Of the same soil their nursery prepare,
With that of their plantation; lest the tree
Translated should not with the soil agree.

Whole rising forests, not for pride or show,
But future buildings, future navies grow:
Let his plantations stretch from down to down,
First shade a country, and then raise a town.

Virgil, with great modesty in his looks, was seated by Calliope in the midst of a plantation of laurel.

3. A colony.
Planting of countries is like planting of woods; the principal thing, that hath been the destruction of most plantations, hath been the base and hasty drawing of profit in the first years; speedily profit is not to be neglected, as far as may stand with the good of the plantation.

4. Introduction; establishment.
Episcopacy must be cast out of this church, after possession here, from the first plantation of christianity in this island.

PLANTED adj. [from plant.] This word seems in Shakespeare to signify, settled; well grounded.

Our court is haunted
With a refined traveller of Spain;
A man in all the world's new fashion planted,
That hath a mint of phrases in his brain.

PLANTER n. f. [planter, Fr. from plant.]

1. One who sows, sets or cultivates; cultivator.
There stood Sabinus, planter of the vines,
And studiously surveys his gen'rous wines.

PLA

What do thy vines avail,
Or olives, when the cruel battle mows

The planters, with their harvest immature?
That product only which our passions bear,
Eludes the planter's miserable care.

2. One who cultivates ground in the West Indian colonies.
A planter in the West Indies might muster up, and lead all his family out against the Indians, without the absolute dominion of a monarch, descending to him from Adam.

He to Jamaica seems transported,
Alone, and by no planter courted.

3. One who disseminates or introduces.
Had these writings differed from the sermons of the first planters of christianity in history or doctrine, they would have been rejected by those churches which they had formed.

PLASH n. f. [plafche, Dutch; platz, Danish.]

1. A small lake of water or puddle.
He leaves
A shallow plash to plunge him in the deep,
And with satiety seeks to quench his thirst.

Two frogs consulted, in the time of drought, when many plashes, that they had repaired to, were dry, what was to be done.

I understand the aquatic or water frog, whereof in ditches and standing plashes we behold millions.

With fifth the miscreant lies bewray'd,
Fall'n in the plash his wickedness had laid.

2. [From the verb to plash.] Branch partly cut off and bound to other branches.
In the plashing your quick, avoid laying of it too low and too thick, which makes the sap run all into the shoots, and leaves the plashes without nourishment.

TO PLASH v. a. [plaffer, Fr.] To interweave branches.
Plant and plash quicklets.

PLASHY adj. [from plash.] Watry; filled with puddles.
Near stood a mill in low and plashy ground.

PLASM n. f. [πλασμα.] A mould; a matrix in which any thing is cast or formed.

The shells served as plasms or moulds to this sand, which, when consolidated, and afterwards freed from its investient shell, is of the same shape with the cavity of the shell.

PLASTER n. f. [plastre, Fr. from πλασσω.]

1. Substance made of water and some absorbent matter, such as chalk or lime well pulverised, with which walls are overlaid or figures cast.

In the same hour came forth fingers of a man's hand, and wrote upon the plaster of the wall.

The floors of plaster, and the walls of dung.
Maps are hung up so high, to cover the naked plaster or waincot.

2. [Emplastrum, Lat. in English, formerly emplaster.] A glutinous or adhesive salve.

Seeing the fore is whole, why retain we the plaster?

When you should bring the plaster.
It not only moves the needle in powder, but likewise, if incorporated with plasters, as we have made trial.

Plasters, that had any effect, must be by dispersing or repelling the humours.

TO PLASTER v. a. [plastrer, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To overlay as with plaster.
Boils and plagues
Plaster you o'er, that one insect another

Against the wind a mile.
The harlot's cheek beautied with plastering art.

A heart settled upon a thought of understanding, is as a fair plastering on the wall.

With a cement of flour, whites of eggs and stone powdered, piccina mirabilis is said to have the walls plastered.

Plaster the chinky hives with clay.
The brain is grown more dry in its consistence, and receives not much more impression, than if you wrote with your finger on a plaster'd wall.

2. To cover with a medicated plaster.
PLASTERER n. f. [plastrer, Fr. from plasterer.]

1. One whose trade is to overlay walls with plaster.
Thy father was a plasterer,
And thou thyself a sheerman.

2. One who forms figures in plaster.
The plasterer makes his figures by addition, and the carver by subtraction.

PLASTICK adj. [πλαστικός.] Having the power to give form.
Benign creator! let thy plastick hand
Dispose its own effect.

There is not any thing strange in the production of the said formed metals, nor other plastick virtue concerned in shaping them into those figures, than merely the configuration of the particles.

TO PLAT. v. a. [from plat.] To weave; to make by texture.

I have seen nests of an Indian bird curiously interwoven and platted together. Roy on the Creation.

I never found so much benefit from any expedient, as from a ring, in which my mistress's hair is platted in a kind of true lovers knot. Addison's Spectator, N° 245.

PLAT. n. f. [more properly plat; plot, Sax.] A small piece of ground.

Such pleasure took the serpent to behold
This flow'ry plat, the sweet recess of Eve. Milton.

On a plat of rising ground,
I hear the far-off curfew found,
Over some wide-water'd shore,
Swinging slow with fullen roar. Milton.

It palfies through banks of violets and plats of willow of its own producing. Spectator.

PLATANE. n. f. [platane, Fr. platanus, Lat.] The plane tree.

The platane round,
The carver holms, the mapple seldom inward found. Spens.

I clpy'd thee, fair and tall;
Under a platane. Milton.

PLATE. n. f. [plate, Dutch; plaque, Fr.]

1. A piece of metal beat out into breadth.

In his livery
Walk'd crowns and coronets, realms and islands were
As plates dropt from his pocket. Shakefp.

Make a plate, and burnish it as they do iron. Bacon.

A leaden bullet-shot from one of these guns, the space of twenty paces, will be beaten into a thin plate. Philips.

The centers of these wretches, who could derive no sanctity to them; yet in that they had been consecrated by the offering incense, were appointed to be beaten into broad plates, and fastened upon the altar. South's Sermons.

Eternal deities!
Who rule the world with absolute decrees,
And write whatever time shall bring to pass
With pens of adamant on plates of brass. Dryden.

2. Armour of plates.

With their force they pierc'd both plate and mail,
And made wide furrows in their fleshes frail. Fa. Queen.

3. [Plata, Spanish.] Wrought silver.

They eat on beds of silk and gold,
And leaving plates,
Do drink in stone of higher rate. Benj. Johnson's Catalogue.

The Turks entered into the trenches so far, that they carried away the plate. Knox's Hist. of the Turks.

They that but now for honour and for plate
Made the sea blush with blood; resign their hate. Waller.

At your desert bright pewter comes too late,
When your first course was all serv'd up in plate. King.

4. [Plat, Fr. piatta, Italian.] A small shallow vessel of metal on which meat is eaten.

Africanus thus observ'd, and, smiling, said,
See, we devour the plates on which we fed. Dryden.

TO PLATE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with plates.

The doors are curiously cut through and plated. Sandys.

M. Lepidus's house had a marble door-case; afterwards they had gilded ones, or rather plated with gold. Arbutnot.

2. To arm with plates.

Plate sin with gold,
And the strong lance of justice hurtless breaks. Shakefp.

Marshall, ask yonder knight in arms,
Why plated in habiliments of war? Shakefp.

His goodly eyes,
That o'er the files and musters of the war,
Have glow'd like plated Mars. Shakefp.

The bold Acalonite
Fled from his lion ramp, old warriors turn'd
Their plated backs under his heel. Milton.

3. To beat into laminae or plates.

If to fame alone thou dost pretend,
The miser will his empty palace lend,

Pleafingly troublesome thought and remembrance have been to me since I left you. Suckling.
Thus to herself she pleafingly began. Milton.
The end of the artist is pleafingly to deceive the eye. Dryden.
He gains all points, who pleafingly confounds, Surprizes, varies, and conceals the bounds. Pope.

PLEASINGNESS. n. f. [from pleafing.] Quality of giving delight.

PLEASEMAN. n. f. [please and man.] A pickthank; an officious fellow.
Some carry tale, some pleafeman, some slight zany,
That knows the trick to make my lady laugh, Told our intents. Shakespeare's Love's Labour's Lost.

PLEASURABLE. adj. [from please.] Delightful; full of pleasure.
Planting of orchards is very profitable, as well as pleasurable. Bacon.
It affords a pleasurable habitation in every part, and that is the line eclipsick. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
There are, that the compounded fluid drain
From different mixtures: so the blended streams,
Each mutually correcting each, create A pleasurable medley. Philips.
Our ill-judging thought Hardly enjoys the pleasurable taste. Prior.

PLEASURE. n. f. [plaisir, French.]
1. Delight; gratification of the mind or senses.
Pleasure, in general, is the consequent apprehension of a suitable object, suitably applied to a rightly disposed faculty. South's Sermons.
A cause of men's taking pleasure in the sins of others, is, that poor spiritidness that accompanies guilt. South's Sermons.
In hollow caves sweet echo quiet lies;
Her name with pleasure once she taught the shore,
Now Daphne's dead, and pleasure is no more. Pope.
2. Loose gratification.
Convey your pleasures in a spacious plenty,
And yet lean cold. Shakespeare.
Behold yon dame does shake the head to hear of pleasure's name. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Not sunk in carnal pleasure. Milton.
3. Approbation.
The Lord taketh pleasure in them that fear him. Psalms.
4. What the will dictates.
Use your pleasure; if your love do not persuade you to come, let not my letter. Shakespeare's Merch. of Venice.
He will do his pleasure on Babylon. If. xlviii.
5. Choice; arbitrary will.
We ascribe not only effects depending on the natural period of time unto arbitrary calculations, and such as vary at pleasure, but confirm our tenets by the uncertain account of others. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.
Half their fleet offends
His open side, and high above him shews;
Upon the rest at pleasure he descends,
And doubly harm'd, he double harm bestows. Dryden.
Raise tempests at your pleasure. Dryden.
We can at pleasure move several parts of our bodies. Locke.
All the land in their dominions being acquired by conquest, was dispos'd by them according to their pleasure. Arbutnot.

TO PLEASE. v. a. [from the noun.] To please; to gratify. This word, though supported by good authority, is, I think, inelegant.
Things, thus set in order,
Shall further thy harvest, and pleasure thee best. Tusser.
I count it one of my greatest afflictions, that I cannot please such an honourable gentleman. Shakespeare.
If what pleases him, shall pleasure you,
Fight closer, or good faith you'll catch a blow. Shakespeare.
When the way of pleasuring and displeasuring lieth by the favourite, it is impossible any should be overgreat. Bacon.
Nothing is difficult to love; it will make a man cross his own inclinations to pleasure them whom he loves. Tillotson.

PLEASUREFUL. adj. [pleasure and full.] Pleafant; delightful.
Obsolete.
This country, for the fruitfulness of the land and the convenience of the sea, hath been reputed a very commodious and pleafeful country. Abbot's Descript. of the World.

PLE

PLEBEIAN. n. f. [plebeius, Fr. plebeius, Lat.] One of the lower people.

Let him
Hoist thee up to the shouting plebeians.
You're plebeians, if they be senators.
Upon the least intervals of peace, the quarrels between the nobles and the plebeians would revive.

PLEBEIAN. adj.
1. Popular; consisting of mean persons.
As swine are to gardens, so are tumults to parliaments, and plebeian concourses to publick counsels.

2. Belonging to the lower ranks.
He through the midst unmark'd,
In shew plebeian angel militant
Of lowest order.

3. Vulgar; low; common.
To apply notions philosophical to plebeian terms; or to say, where the notions cannot fitly be reconciled, that there wanteth a term or nomenclature for it, as the ancients used, they be but shifts of ignorance.

The differences of mouldable and not mouldable, feisible and not feisible are plebeian notions.
Dishonour not the vengeance I design'd.

A queen! and own a base plebeian mind!
PLEDGE. n. f. [plēge, Fr. piegare, Italian.]
1. A thing put to pawn.
2. A gage; any thing given by way of warrant or security; a pawn.

These men at the first were only pitied; the great humility, zeal and devotion, which appeared to be in them, was in all men's opinion a pledge of their harmless meaning.

If none appear to prove upon thy person
Thy heinous, manifest and many treasons;
There is my pledge, I'll prove it on thy heart.

That voice their liveliest pledge
Of hope in fears and dangers.
Hymen shall be aton'd, shall join two hearts,
And Aribert shall be the pledge of peace.

What purpose could there be of treason, when the Guianians offered to leave pledges, fix for one.
Good sureties will we have for thy return,
And at thy pledges peril keep thy day.

PLEDGE. v. a. [plēger, Fr. piegiare, Italian.]
1. To put in pawn.
Asleep and naked as an Indian lay,
An honest factor stole a gem away;
He pledg'd it to the knight; the knight had wit,
So kept the diamond.

2. To give as warrant or security.
To secure by a pledge.
I accept her;
And here to pledge my vow, I give my hand.

3. To invite to drink, by accepting the cup or health after another.
The fellow, that Parts bread with him, and pledges
The breath of him in a divided draught,
Is th' readiest man to kill him.

To you noble lord of Westmoreland,
—I pledge your grace.
That hexanimous orator began the king of Homibia's health; he presently pledg'd it.

PLEDGET. n. f. [plēghe, Dutch.] A small mass of lint.
I applied a pledget of basilicon.

PLEIADS. n. f. [pleiades, Lat. πλειάδες,] A northern constellation.
The pleiades before him dane'd,
Shedding sweet influence.

Then sailors quarter'd heav'n, and found a name
For pleiads, hyads and the northern car.

PLENARILY. adv. [from plenary.] Fully; completely.
The cause is made a plenary cause, and ought to be determined plenarily.

PLENARY. adj. [from plenus, Lat.] Full; complete.
I am far from denying that compliance on my part, for plenary consent it was not, to his destruction.

The cause is made a plenary cause.
A treatise on a subject should be plenary or full, so that nothing may be wanting, nothing which is proper omitted.

PLENARY. n. f. Decisive procedure.
A bare institution without induction does not make a plenary against the king, where he has a title to present.

PLENARINESS. n. f. [from plenary.] Fulness; completeness.
PLENILUNARY. adj. [from plenilunium, Lat.] Relating to the full moon.
If we add the two Egyptian days in every month, the interlunary and plenilunary exemptions, there would arise above an hundred more.

PLE

PLENIPOTENCE. n. f. [from plenus and potentia, Lat.] Fulness of power.
PLENIPOTENT. adj. [from plenipotens, Lat.] Invested with full power.

My substitutes I send you, and create Plenipotents on earth, of matchless might Issuing from me.

PLENIPOTENTIARY. n. f. [from plenipotentia, Fr.] A negotiator invested with full power.
They were only the plenipotentiary monks of the patriarchal monks.

PLENIST. n. f. [from plenus, Lat.] One that holds all space to be full of matter.
Those spaces, which the vacuists would have empty, because devoid of air, the plenists do not prove replenished with subtle matter by any sensible effects.

PLENITUDE. n. f. [from plentudo, from plenus, Lat. plenitudo, Fr.] 1. Fulness; the contrary to vacuity.
If there were every where an absolute plenitude and density without any pores between the particles of bodies, all bodies of equal dimensions would contain an equal quantity of matter, and consequently be equally ponderous.

2. Repletion; animal fulness; plentiness.
3. Exuberance; abundance.
The plenitude of the pope's power of dispensing was the main question.

4. Completeness.
The plenitude of William's fame
Can no accumulated stores receive.

PLENTEOUS. adj. [from plentia.] 1. Copious; exuberant; abundant.
Author of evil, unknown till thy revolt
Now plenteous these acts of hateful strife.

Two plenteous fountains the whole prospect crown'd;
This through the gardens leads its streams around.

2. Fruitful; fertile.
Take up the fifth part of the land in the seven plenteous years.
Lab'ring the soil and reaping plenteous crop.

PLENTEOUSLY. adv. [from plentibus.] Copiously; abundantly; exuberantly.
Thy due from me is tears,
Which nature, love and filial tenderness
Shall, O dear father, pay thee plenteously.

God created the great whales and each Soul living, each that crept, which plenteously
The waters generated.
God proves us in this life, that he may the more plenteously reward us in the next.

PLENTEOUSNESS. n. f. [from plentibus.] Abundance; fertility.
The seven years of plenteousness in Egypt were ended.

PLENTIFUL. adj. [from plentia and full.] Copious; abundant; exuberant; fruitful.
To Amalthea he gave a country, bending like a horn;
whence the tale of Amalthea's plentiful horn.

He that is plentiful in expences, will hardly be preserved from decay.
If it be a long winter, it is commonly a more plentiful year.

When they had a plentiful harvest, the farmer had hardly any corn.
Alcibiades was a young man of noble birth, excellent education and a plentiful fortune.

PLENTIFULLY. adv. [from plentiful.] Copiously; abundantly.
They were not multiplied before, but they were at that time plentifully encreased.

Born is plentifully furnished with water, there being a great multitude of fountains.
PLENTIFULNESS. n. f. [from plentiful.] The state of being plentiful; abundance; fertility.

PLENTY. n. f. [from plenus, full.] 1. Abundance; such a quantity as is more than enough.
Peace,
Dear nurse of arts, plenties and joyful birth.

What makes land, as well as other things, dear, is plenty of buyers, and but few sellers; and so plenty of sellers and few buyers makes land cheap.

2. Fruitfulness; exuberance.
The teeming clouds
Descend in gladness plenty o'er the world.

3. It is used, I think, barbarously for plentiful.
To graft with thy calves,
Where water is plenty.

4. A state in which enough is had and enjoyed.
Ye shall eat in plenty and be satisfied, and praise the Lord.

PLI

PLEONASM. n. f. [pleonasmus, Fr. pleonasmus, Lat.] A figure of rhetoric, by which more words are used than are necessary.
PLESH. n. f. [A word used by Spenser instead of plash, for the convenience of rhyme.] A puddle; a boggy marsh.

Out of the wound the red blood flowed fresh,
That underneath his feet soon made a purple plesh.

PLETHORA. n. f. [from πλεθώρα.] The state in which the vessels are fuller of humours than is agreeable to a natural state or health; arises either from a diminution of some natural evacuations, or from debauch and feeding higher or more in quantity than the ordinary powers of the viscera can digest: evacuations and exercise are its remedies.

The diseases of the fluids are a plethora, or too great abundance of laudable juices.
PLETHORE. n. f. [from plethora.] Having a full habit.

PLETHORICK. adj. [from plethora.] 1. The fluids, as they consist of spirit, water, salts, oil and terrestrial parts, differ according to the redundancy of the whole or of any of these; and therefore the plethorick are phlegmatick, oily, saline, earthy or dry.

PLETHORY. n. f. [from πλεθωρα, Fr. from πλεθώρα.] Fulness of habit.
In too great repletion, the elastic force of the tube throws the fluid with too great a force, and subjects the animal to the diseases depending upon a plethory.

PLEVIN. n. f. [plevine, Fr. plevina, law Lat.] In law, a warrant or assurance. See REPLEVIN.
PLEURISY. n. f. [πλευρις; pleuresis, Fr. pleuritis, Lat.] Pleurisy is an inflammation of the pleura, though it is hardly distinguishable from an inflammation of any other part of the breast, which are all from the same cause, a stagnated blood; and are to be remedied by evacuation, suppuration or expectoration, or all together.

PLEURITICAL. adj. [from pleurisy.] 1. Diseased with a pleurisy.
The viscous matter, which lies like leather upon the extravasated blood of pleuritical people, may be dissolved by a due degree of heat.

2. Denoting a pleurisy.
His blood was pleuritical, it had neither colour nor consistence.

PLIABLE. adj. [pliable, from plier, Fr. to bend.] 1. Easy to be bent; flexible.
Though an act be never so sinful, they will strip it of its guilt, and make the very law so pliable and bending, that it shall be impossible to be broke.

Whether the different motions of the animal spirits may have any effect on the mould of the face, when the lineaments are pliable and tender, I shall leave to the curious.

2. Flexible of disposition; easy to be persuaded.
PLIABLENESS. n. f. [from pliable.] 1. Flexibility; easiness to be bent.
2. Flexibility of mind.

Compare the ingenious pliancy of virtuous counsels in youth, as it comes fresh out of the hands of nature, with the confirmed obliquity in most sorts of sin, that is to be found in an aged sinner.

PLIANT. adj. [pliant, French.] 1. Pending; tough; flexible; pliant; like; limber.
An anatomist promised to dissect a woman's tongue, and examine whether the fibres may not be made up of a finer and more pliant thread.

2. Easy to take a form.
Particles of heavenly fire,
Or earth but new divided from the sky,
And pliant still retain'd th' ethereal energy.

As the wax melts that to the flame I hold,
Pliant and warm may still her heart remain,
Soft to the print, but ne'er turn hard again.

In languages the tongue is more pliant to all sounds, the joints more supple to all feats of activity, in youth than afterwards.

Those, who bore bulwarks on their backs,
Now practise ev'ry pliant gesture,
Opening their trunk for ev'ry tester.

4. Easily persuaded.
The will was then ductile and pliant to right reason, it met the dictates of a clarified understanding halfway.

PLIANTNESS. n. f. [from pliant.] Flexibility; toughness.
Greatness of weight, closeness of parts, fixation, pliancy or softness.

PLIATURE. n. f. [pliatura, from plio, Lat.] Fold; double.
PLICATION. n. f. [plication is used somewhere in Clarissa.] 1. An instrument by which any thing is laid hold on to bend it.

PLO

Pliers are of two sorts, flat-nosed and round-nosed; their office is to hold and fasten upon a small work, and to fit it in its place: the round-nosed pliers are used for turning or boring wire or small plate into a circular form.

I made a detention by a small pair of pliers.
To PLOTT. v. a. [plotten, Dutch.] 1. To plot; to give as surety.
He plighted his right hand
Unto another love, and to another land.

Met the night mare, and her name toid,
Bid her alight, and her troth plight.
I again in Henry's royal name,
Give thee her hand for sign of plighted faith.

Here my inviolable faith I plight,
Lo, thou be my defence, I, thy delight.
New loves you seek,
New vows to plight, and plighted vows to break.

I'll never mix my plighted hands with thine,
While such a cloud of mischief hangs about us.
2. To braid; to weave. [from plio, Lat. whence to ply or bend, and plight, plight or plait, a fold or flexure.]
Her head the fondly would aguish
With gaudie garlands, or fresh flowrets dight
About her neck, or rings of ruffles plight.

I took it for a fairy vision
Of some gay creature of the element,
That in the colours of the rainbow lives,
And play it th' plighted clouds.

PLIGHT. n. f. [This word skinner imagines to be derived from the Dutch, plicht, office or employment; but Junius observes, that plio, Saxon, signifies distress or pressing danger; whence, I suppose, plight was derived, it being generally used in a bad sense.] 1. Condition; state.
When as the careful dwarf had told,
And made ensample of their mournful sight Unto his master, he no longer would
There dwell in peril of like painful plight.

I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are.
Beseech your highness,
My women may be with me; for, you see,
My plight requires it.

They in lowliest plight repentant stood Praying.
Thou must not here
Lie in this miserable leathern plight.

Most perfect hero tried in heavili plight
Of labours huge and hard.

2. Good case.
Who abuseth his cattle and starves them for meat,
By carting or plowing, his gain is not great;
Where he that with labour can use them aright,
Hath gain to his comfort, and cattle in plight.

3. Pledge; gage. [from the verb.]
That lord, whose hand must take my plight, shall carry Half my love with him, half my care and duty.

4. [From plight.] A fold; a pucker; a double; a purle; a plait.
Yelad, for fear of scorching air,
All in a silken camus, lilly white,
Purled upon with many a folded plight.

PLINTH. n. f. [πλινθία.] In architecture, is that square member which serves as a foundation to the base of a pillar; Vitruvius calls the upper part or abacus of the Tuscan pillar, a plinth, because it resembles a square tile: moreover, the same denomination is sometimes given to a thick wall, wherein there are two or three bricks advanced in form of a plat-band.

To PLOD. v. n. [ploeghen, Dutch. Skinner.] 1. To toil; to toil; to drudge; to travel.
A plodding diligence brings us sooner to our journey's end, than a fluttering way of advancing by starts.

He knows better than any man, what is not to be written; and never hazards himself so far as to fall, but plods on deliberately, and, as a grave man ought, puts his staff before him.

Th' unletter'd christian, who believes in grois,
Plods on to heav'n, and ne'er is at a loss.

2. To travel laboriously.
Rogues, plod away o' the hoof, seek shelter, pack. Shak.
If one of mean affairs
Glide thither in a day.

3. To study.
Hast thou not held my stirrup?
Bare-headed, plodded by my foot-cloth mule,
And thought thee happy when I shook my head?

Ambitious love hath so in me offended,
That barefoot plod I the cold ground upon,
With faintest vow my faults to have amended.

PLO

3. To study closely and dully.
Universal plodding prisons up
The nimble spirits in the arteries;
As motion and long-during action tires
The finewy vigour of the traveller.
He plods to turn his am'rous suit
T' a plea in law, and prosecute.
She reason'd without plodding long,
Nor ever gave her judgment wrong.
PLOTTER. n. f. [from plod.] A dull heavy laborious man.
Study is like the heav'n's glorious sun,
That will not be deep search'd with fauzy looks;
What have continual plodders ever won,
Save base authority from other's books?
PLOT. n. f. [plot, Saxon. See PLAT.]
1. A small extent of ground.
It was a chosen plot of fertile land,
Amongst wide waves set like a little nest,
As if it had by nature's cunning hand
Been choicely picked out from all the rest.
Plant ye with alders or willowes a plot,
Where yeerely as needeth mo poles may be got.
Many unfrequented plots there are,
Fitted by kind for rape and villainy.
Were there but this fingle plot to lose,
This mould of Marcus, they to dust would grind it,
And throw't against the wind.
When we mean to build,
We first survey the plot, then draw the model,
And when we see the figure of the house,
Then we must rate the cost of the erection.
Weeds grow not in the wild uncultivated waste, but in garden plots under the negligent hand of a gardener.
2. A plantation laid out.
Some goddess inhabits this region, who is the soul of this soil; for neither is any less than a goddess, worthy to be thrined in such a heap of pleasures; nor any less than a goddess could have made it so perfect a plot.
3. A form; a scheme; a plan.
The law of England never was properly applied unto the Irish nation, as by a purposed plot of government, but as they could insinuate and steal themselves under the same by their humble carriage.
4. [Imagined by Skinner to be derived from platform, Fr.] A conspiracy; a secret deligh formed against another.
I have o'erheard a plot of death upon him.
Easy seems the thing to every one,
That nought could cross their plot, or them suppress.
5. An intrigue; an affair complicated, involved and embarrassed;
the story of a play, comprising an artful involution of affairs, unravell'd at last by some unexpected means.
If the plot or intrigue must be natural, and such as springs from the subject, then the winding up of the plot must be a probable consequence of all that went before.
Nothing must be sung between the acts,
But what some way conduces to the plot.
Our author
Produce'd his play, and begg'd the knight's advice,
Made him observe the subject and the plot,
The manners, passions, unities, what not?
They deny the plot to be tragical, because its catastrophe is a wedding, which hath ever been accounted comical.
6. Stratagem; secret combination to any ill end.
Frustrate all our plots and wiles.
7. Contrivance; deep reach of thought.
Who says he was not
A man of much plot,
May repent that false accusation;
Having plotted and pen'd
Six plays to attend
The farce of his negotiation.
To PLOT. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To form schemes of mischief against another, commonly against those in authority.
The subtle traitor
This day had plotted in the council house
To murder me.
The wicked plotter against the just.
He who envies now thy state,
Who now is plotting how he may seduce
Thee from obedience.
The wolf that round th' inclosure prowls
To leap the fence, now plots not on the fold.
2. To contrive; to scheme.
The count tells the marquis of a flying noise, that the prince did plot to be secretly gone; to which the marquis an-swer'd, that though love had made his highness steal out of his own country, yet fear would never make him run out of Spain.
To PLOT. v. a.
1. To plan; to contrive.

PLO

- With shame and sorrow fill'd:
Shame for his folly; sorrow out of time
For plotting an unprofitable crime.
2. To describe according to ichnography.
This treatise plotted down Cornwall, as it now standeth, for the particulars.
PLOTTER. n. f. [from plot.]
1. Conspirator.
As for you, Colonel, we shall try who's the greater plotter of us two; I against the state, or you against the petticoat.
2. Contriver.
An irreligious moor,
Chief architect and plotter of these woes.
PLOTTER. n. f. [from plot, Fr. pluvialis, Lat.] A lapwing. A bird.
Of wild birds, Cornwall hath quail, rail, partridge, pheasant and plotter.
The bittern knows his time: or from the shore,
The plotters when to scatter o'er the heath
And sing.
PLOT. n. f. [plog, Saxon; plog, Danish; plogh, Dutch.]
1. The instrument with which the furrows are cut in the ground to receive the seed.
Look how the purple flower, which the plough
Hath torn in sunder, languishing doth die.
Some ploughs differ in the length and shape of their beams;
some in the share, others in the coulter and handles.
In ancient times the sacred plough employ'd
The kings and awful fathers.
2. A kind of plane.
To PLOUGH. v. n. To practise aration; to turn up the ground in order to sow seed.
Rebellion, insolence, sedition
We ourselves have plough'd for, sow'd and scatter'd,
By mingling them with us.
Doth the ploughman plough all day to sow? If xxviii. 24.
They only give the land one ploughing, and sow white oats, and harrow them as they do black.
To PLOUGH. v. a.
1. To turn up with the plough.
Let the Volscians
Plough Rome and harrow Italy.
Should any slave, so lowly, belong to you?
No doubt you'd send the rogue, in fetters bound,
To work in bridewell, or to plough your ground.
A man may plough, in stiff grounds the first time fallow'd, an acre a day.
2. To bring to view by the plough.
Another of a dusky colour, near black; there are of these frequently ploughed up in the fields of Weldon.
3. To furrow; to divide.
When the prince her funeral rites had paid,
He plough'd the Tyrrhene seas with sails display'd.
With speed we plough the wat'ry ways.
My power shall guard thee.
4. To tear; to furrow.
Let
Patient Octavia plough thy visage up
With her prepared nails.
PLOWBOY. n. f. [plough and boy.] A boy that follows the plough; a coarse ignorant boy.
A ploughboy, that has never seen any thing but thatched houses and his parish church, imagines that thatch belongs to the very nature of a house.
PLOWGHER. n. f. [from plough.] One who ploughs or cultivates ground.
When the country shall be replenish'd with corn, as it will, if well followed; for the country people themselves are great ploughers and small spenders of corn: then there should be good store of magazines erected.
PLOWLAND. n. f. [plough and land.] A farm for corn.
Who hath a ploughland casts all his seed-corn there,
And yet allows his ground more corn should bear.
In this book are entered the names of the manors or inhabited townships, the number of ploughlands that each contains, and the number of the inhabitants.
PLOWHMAN. n. f. [plough and man.]
1. One that attends or uses the plough.
When shepherds pipe on oaten straws,
And merry larks are ploughmen's clocks,
The cuckoo then on ev'ry tree.
God provides the good things of the world, to serve the needs of nature by the labours of the ploughman.
The careful ploughman doubting stands.
Than the warm fun advances his increase.
The merchant gains by peace, and the soldiers by war,
The shepherd by wet seasons, and the ploughmen by dry.
Who

- Who can cease t' admire
The ploughman consul in his coarse attire.
One
My ploughman's is, t'other my shepherd's son.
2. A gross ignorant ruffick.
Her hand! to whose soft seizure
The cignet's down is harsh, and, spite of sense,
Hard as the palm of ploughman.
3. A strong laborious man.
A weak stomach will turn rye bread into vinegar, and a ploughman will digest it.
PLOWCHAMONDAY. n. f. The monday after twelfth-day.
Ploughmonday next after that the twelfth-day is past,
Bids out with the plough, the worst husband is last.
PLOWCHAMONDAY. n. f. [plough and share.] The part of the plough that is perpendicular to the coulter.
As the earth was turned up, the ploughshare lighted upon a great stone; we pulled that up, and so found some pretty things.
The pretty innocent walks blindfold among burning plough- shares without being scorched.
To PLOUGH. v. a. [plocian, Sax. placken, Dutch.]
1. To pull with nimbleness or force; to snatch; to pull; to draw; to force on or off; to force up or down; to act upon with violence. It is very generally and licentiously used, particularly by Shakespeare.
It seem'd better unto that noble king to plant a peaceable government among them, than by violent means to pluck them under.
You were crown'd before,
And that high royalty was ne'er pluck'd off.
Pluck down my officers, break my decrees,
For now a time is come to mock at form.
Can't thou not
Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow,
And with some sweet oblivious antidote
Cleanse the stuff'd bosom.
When yet he was but tender bodied, when youth with conelines plucked all gaze his way.
I gave my love a ring;
He would not pluck it from his finger, for the wealth
That the world masters.
If you do wrongfully seize Hereford's right,
You pluck a thousand dangers on your head.
Dive into the bottom of the deep,
Where fathom line could never touch the ground,
And pluck up drowned honour by the locks.
I will pluck them up by the roots out of my land.
Pluck away his crop with his feathers.
A time to plant, and a time to pluck up that which is planted.
They pluck off their skin from off them.
Dipatch 'em quick, but first pluck out their tongues,
Left with their dying breath they sow sedition.
Beneath this shade the weary peasant lies,
Plucks the broad leaf, and bids the breezes rise.
From the back
Of herds and flocks, a thousand tugging bills
Pluck hair and wool.
2. To strip of feathers.
Since I plucked geese, I knew not what it was to be beaten.
I come to thee from plume pluck'd Richard.
3. To pluck up a heart or spirit. A proverbial expression for taking up or refusing of courage.
He wilted them to pluck up their hearts, and make all things ready for a new assault, wherein he expected they should with courageous resolution recompense their late cowardice.
Pluck. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A pull; a draw; a single act of plucking.
Birds kept coming and going all the day long; but so few at a time, that the man did not think them worth a pluck.
Were the ends of the bones dry, they could not, without great difficulty, obey the plucks and attractions of the motory muscles.
2. [Pluck, Eric. I know not whether derived from the English, rather than the English from the Eric.] The heart, liver and lights of an animal.
PLUCKER. n. f. [from pluck.] One that plucks.
Thou faster up and plucker down of kings!
Pull it as soon as you see the seed begin to grow brown, at which time let the plucker tie it up in handfuls.
PLUCK. n. f. [plugg, Swedish; pluggen, Dutch.] A stopple; any thing driven hard into another body.
Shutting the valve with the plug, draw down the sucker to the bottom.
The fighting with a man's own shadow, consists in the brandishing of two sticks grasped in each hand, and laden with plugs of lead at either end: this opens the chest.
In bottling wine, fill your mouth full of corks, together with a large plug of tobacco.

PLU

- To PLUG. v. a. [from the noun.] To stop with a plug.
A tent plugging up the orifice, would make the matter recur to the part disposed to receive it.
PLUM. n. f. [plum, plume, Sax. blumme, Danish. A custom has prevailed of writing plumb, but improperly.]
1. A fruit.
The flower consists of five leaves, which are placed in a circular order, and expand in form of a rose, from whose flower-cup rises the pointal, which afterwards becomes an oval or globular fruit, having a soft fleshy pulp, surrounding an hard oblong stone, for the most part pointed; to which should be added, the footstalks are long and slender, and have but a single fruit upon each: the species are; 1. The jean-hative, or white primordian. 2. The early black damask, commonly called the Morocco plum. 3. The little black damask plum. 4. The great damask violet of Tours. 5.

20. St. Catharine plum. 21. The royal plum. 22. La mirabelle. 23. The Brignole plum. 24. The empress. 25.
The monieur plum: this is sometimes called the Wentworth plum, both resembling the bonum magnum. 26. The cherry plum. 27. The white pear plum. 28. The mulc plum.
29. The St. Julian plum. 30. The black bullace-tree plum.
31. The white bullace-tree plum. 32. The black thorn or floe-tree plum.
Philosophers in vain enquired, whether the summum bonum consisted in riches, bodily delights, virtue or contemplation:
they might as reasonably have disputed, whether the best relish were in apples, plums or nuts.
2. Raisin; grape dried in the sun.
3. [In the cant of the city.] The sum of one hundred thousand pounds.
By the present edict, many a man in France will swell into a plum, who fell several thousand pounds short of it the day before.
The miser must make up his plum,
And dares not touch the hoarded sum.
By fair dealing John had acquired some plums, which he might have kept, had it not been for his law-suit.
Ask you,
Why she and Sapho raise that monstrous sum?
Alas! they fear a man will cost a plum.
4. A kind of play, called how many plums for a penny.
PLUMAGE. n. f. [plumage, Fr.] Feathers; suit of feathers.
The plumage of birds exceeds the pilosity of beasts.
Say, will the falcon, stooping from above,
Smite with her varying plumage, spate the dove.
PLUMB. n. f. [plumb, Fr. plumbum, Lat.] A plummet; a leaden weight let down at the end of a line.
If the plumb line hang just upon the perpendicular, when the level is set flat down upon the work, the work is level.
PLUMBS. adv. [from the noun.] Perpendicularly to the horizon.
If all these atoms should descend plumb down with equal velocity, being all perfectly solid and imporous, and the vacuum not resisting their motion, they would never the one overtake the other.
Is it not a sad thing to fall thus plumb into the grave? well one minute and dead the next.
To PLUMB. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To found; to search by a line with a weight at its end.
The most experienced seamen plumbed the depth of the channel.
2. To regulate any work by the plummet.
PLUMBER. n. f. [plombier, Fr.] One who works upon lead.
Commonly written and pronounced plummer.
PLUMBERY. n. f. [from plumber.] Works of lead; the manufactures of a plumber. Commonly spelt plummary.
PLUMCAKE. n. f. [plum and cake.] Cake made with raisins.
He cram'd them till their gurs did ache
With caudle, cuttard and plumcake.
PLUME. n. f. [plume, Fr. pluma, Lat.]
1. Feather of birds.
Let frantick Talbot triumph for a while,
And, like a peacock, sweep along his tail;
We'll pull his plumes, and take away his train.
Wings he wore of many a colour'd plume.
They appear made up of little bladders, like those in the plume or stalk of a quill.
2. Feather worn as an ornament.
Let every feeble rumour shake your hearts,
Your enemies with nodding of their plumes
Fan you into despair.

Deeper than did ever plummet found,

I'll drown my book. Shakespeare's Temp.

Fly envious time

Call on the lazy leaden-stepping hours,

Whose speed is but the heavy plummet's pace. Milton.

2. Any weight.

God sees the body of flesh which you bear about you, and the plummet which it hangs upon your soul, and therefore, when you cannot rise high enough to him, he comes down to you. Duessa's Rules for Devotion.

The heaviness of these bodies, being always in the ascending side of the wheel, must be counterpoised by a plummet fastened about the pulley on the axis: this plummet will descend according as the sand doth make the several parts of the wheel lighter or heavier. Wilkins.

PLUMOTRY, n. f. [from plumous.] The state of having feathers.

PLUMOUS, adj. [plumeus, Fr. plumosus, Lat.] Feathery; resembling feathers.

This has a like plumous body in the middle, but finer. Woodward on Fossils.

PLUMP, adj. [Of this word the etymology is not known. Skinner derives it from pommet, Fr. full like a ripe apple; it might be more easily deduced from plum, which yet seems very harsh. Junius omits it.] Somewhat fat; not lean; sleek; full and smooth.

The heifer, that valued itself upon a smooth coat and a plump habit of body, was taken up for a sacrifice; but the ox, that was despoiled for his raw bones, went on with his work still. L'Estrange.

Plump gentleman,

Get out as fast as e'er you can;

Or cease to push, or to exclaim,

You make the very crowd you blame. Prior.

The fannish'd cow

We rested under a plump of trees.

Spread upon a lake, with upward eye

A plump of fowl behold their foe on high;

They close their trembling troop, and all attend

On whom the fowling eagle will descend. Dryden.

To PLUMP, v. a. [from the adjective.] To fatten; to swell; to make large.

PLU

The particles of air expanding themselves, plump out the sides of the bladder, and keep them turgid. Boyle.

I'm as lean as carrion; but a wedding at our house will plump me up with good cheer. L'Estrange.

Let them lie for the dew and rain to plump them. Mart.

To PLUMP, v. n. [from the adverb.]

2. [From the adjective.] To be swollen. Ainsworth.

1. To fall like a stone into the water. A word formed from the sound.

PLUMP, adv. [Probably corrupted from plumb, or perhaps formed from the sound of a stone falling on the water.] With a sudden fall.

I would fain now see 'em rowl'd

Down a hill, or from a bridge

Head-long cast, to break their ridge;

Or to some river take 'em

Plump, and see if that would wake 'em. B. Johnson.

Fluttering his pennons vain plump down he drops. Milt.

PLUMPER, n. f. [from plump.] Something worn in the mouth to swell out the cheeks.

She dextrously her plumper's draws,

Come, thou monarch of the vine,

Plumpy Bacchus, with pink eyne,

In thy vats our cares be drown'd. Shakespeare.

PLUMY, adj. [from plume.] Feathered; covered with feathers.

Satan fell, and straight a fiery globe

Of angels on full sail of wing flew high,

Who on their plumy vans receiv'd him soft

From his uneasy station, and upbore

As on a floating couch through the blithe air. Milton.

Appear'd his plumy crest, befeard with blood. Addison.

Sometimes they are like a quill, with the plumy part only upon one side. Grew's Colours, b. i.

To PLUNDER, v. a. [plunderen, Dutch.]

1. To pillage; to rob in an hostile way.

Nebuchadnezzar plunders the temple of God, and we find the fatal doom that afterwards befel him. South's Sermons.

Ships the fruits of their exaction brought,

Which made in peace a treasure richer far,

Than what is plunder'd in the rage of war. Dryden.

2. To rob as a thief.

Their country's wealth our mightier misers drain,

Or crooks, to plunder provinces, the main. Pope.

PLUNDER, n. f. [from the verb.] Pillage; spoils gotten in war.

Let loose the murmuring army on their masters,

To pay themselves with plunder. Oron.

PLUNDERER, n. f. [from plunder.]

1. Hostile pillager; spoiler.

2. A thief; a robber.

It was a famous saying of William Rufus, who ever spares perjured men, robbers, plunderers and traitors, deprives all good men of their peace and quietness. Addison.

We cannot future violence overcome,

Nor give the miserable province ease,

Since what one plunderer left, the next will seize. Dryden.

To PLUNGE, v. a. [plonger, Fr.]

1. To put suddenly under water, or under any thing supposed liquid.

Plunge us in the flames.

Headlong from hence to plunge herself she springs;

But shoots along supported on her wings. Dryden.

2. To put into any state suddenly.

I mean to plunge the boy in pleasing sleep,

And ravish'd in Idalian bow'rs to keep. Dryden.

3. To hurry into any distress.

O conscience! into what abyss of fears

And horrors hast thou driv'n me? out of which

I find no way; from deep to deeper plung'd.

Without a prudent determination in matters before us, we shall be plunged into perpetual errors. Watts.

4. To force in suddenly. This word, to what action soever it be applied, commonly expresses either violence and suddenness in the agent, or distress in the patient.

At this advanced, and sudden as the word,

In proud Pileippus' bosom plung'd the sword. Dryden.

Let them not be too hasty to plunge their enquiries at once into the depths of knowledge.

To PLUNGE, v. n.

1. To sink suddenly into water; to dive.

Accoutred as I was, I plunged in. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

PLURAL, adj. [pluralis, Lat.]

1. Implying more than one.

Thou hast no faith left now, unless thou'd'st two;

Better have none

Than plural faith, which is too much by one. Shakespeare.

2. [In grammar.]

The Greek and Hebrew have two variations, one to signify the number two, and another to signify a number of more than two; under one variation the noun is said to be of the dual number, and under the other of the plural.

PLURALIST, n. f. [pluraliste, Fr. from plural.] One that holds more ecclesiastical benefices than one with cure of souls. If the pluralists would do their best to suppress curates, their number might be so retrenched, that they would not be in the least formidable. Collier on Pride.

PLURALITY, n. f. [pluralitas, Fr.]

1. The state of being or having a greater number.

It is not plurality of parts without majority of parts, that maketh the total greater; yet it seemeth to the eye a shorter distance of way, if it be all dead and continued, than if it have traces, whereby the eye may divide it. Bacon.

2. A number more than one.

Those heretics had introduced a plurality of gods, and so made the profession of the unity part of the symbolum, that should discriminate the orthodox from them. Hammond.

They could forego plurality of wives, though that be the main impediment to the conversion of the East Indies. Bentl.

'Tis impossible to conceive how any language can want this variation of the noun, where the nature of its signification is such as to admit of plurality. Clarke's Lat. Grammar.

3. More cures of souls than one.

4. The greater number; the majority.

Take the plurality of the world, and they are neither wife nor good. L'Estrange's Fables.

Upon a knife; love me, and leave me not. Shakesp.
POET, n. f. [poete, Fr. poeta, Lat. poetis.] An inventor; an author of fiction; a writer of poems; one who writes in measure.
The poet's eye in a fine frenzy rowling,
Doth glance from heav'n to earth, from earth to heav'n;
And, as imagination bodies forth
The forms of things unknown, the poet's pen
Turns them to shape, and gives to ev'ry thing
A local habitation and a name. Shakesp.
Our poet ape, who would be thought the chief,
His works become the frippery of wit,
From brocade he is grown so bold a thief,
While we the robb'd despise, and pity it. B. Johnson.
'Tis not vain or fabulous
What the sage poets taught by the heav'nly muse
Story'd of old in high immortal verse,
Of dire chimeras and enchanted isles. Milton.
A poet is a maker, as the word signifies; and he who cannot make, that is invent, hath his name for nothing. Dryden.
POETASTER, n. f. [Latin.] A vile petty poet.

Whose welcome I perceiv'd, had poison'd mine. Shakespeare.
Hast thou not
With thy false arts poison'd his people's loyalty? Rome.

POISON-TREE. n. f. [toxicodendron.] A plant. The flower consists of five leaves, which are placed orbicularly, and expand in form of a rose, out of whose flower cup rises the stalk, which afterwards becomes a roundish, dry, and for the most part a furrowed fruit, in which is contained one compressed seed. Miller.

POISONOUS. adj. [from poison.]
1. One who poisons.
I must be the poisoner. Shakespeare.

Of good Polixenes.
So many mischiefs were in one combin'd;
So much one single poisoner cost mankind. Dryden.

2. A corrupter.
Wretches who live upon other men's sins, the common poisoners of youth, getting their very bread by the damnation of souls. South's Sermons.

POISONOUS. adj. [from poison.] Venomous; having the qualities of poison.
Those cold ways,
That seem like prudent helps, are very poisonous,
Where the disease is violent. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

When with his poisonous breath he blasts the sky. Dryden.
A lake, that has no fresh water running into it, will, by heat and its stagnation, turn into a stinking rotten puddle, sending forth noxious and poisonous steams. Choyce.

POISONOUSLY. adv. [from poisonous.] Venomously.
Men more easily pardon ill things done, than ill things said; such a peculiar rancour and venom do they leave behind in men's minds, and so much more poisonously and incur-ably does the serpent bite with his tongue than his teeth.
South's Sermons.

POISONOUSNESS. n. f. [from poisonous.] The quality of being poisonous; venomousness.

2. Balance; equipoize; equilibrium.
To do't at peril of your soul,
Were equal poize of sin and charity. Shakespeare.

Where an equal poize of hope and fear Does arbitrate th' event, my nature is That I incline to hope. Milton.

The particles that formed the earth, must convene from all quarters towards the middle, which would make the whole compound to rest in a poize. Bentley's Sermons.

'Tis odd to see fluctuation in opinion so earnestly charged upon Luther, by such as have lived half their days in a poize between two churches. Atterbury.

3. A regulating power.
Men of an unbounded imagination often want the poize of judgment. Dryden.

To POIZE. v. a. [poiser, French.]
1. To balance; to hold or place in equipoisance.
How nice to couch? how all her speeches poized be:
A nymph thus turn'd, but mended in translation. Sidney.

As the fands
Of Barca or Cyrene's torrid soil,
Levy'd to side with warning winds, and poize
Their lighter wings. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ii.

Not yet was earth suspended in the sky,
Nor poiz'd did on her own foundation lie. Dryden.
Our nation with united int'rest blest,
Not now content to poize, shall sway the rest. Dryden.

Where could they find another form'd to fit,
To poize with solid sense a sprightly wit!
Th' all-perfect mind. Dryden.

That poiz'd, impels and rules the steady whole. Thomson.
2. To be equisponderant to.
If the balance of our lives had not one scale of reason to poize another of sensuality, the baseness of our natures would conduct us to preposterous conclusions. Shakespeare. Othello.

3. To weigh.
We poizing us in her defective scale
Shall weigh thee to the beam. Shakespeare.

He cannot sincerely consider the strength, poize the weight and discern the evidence of the clearest arguments, where they would conclude against his desires. South's Sermons.

4. To oppress with weight.
I'll strive, with troubl'd thoughts, to take a nap,
Left leaden slumber poize me down to-morrow,
When I should mount with wings of victory. Shakespeare.

POKE. n. f. [pocca, Sax. pèche, Fr.] A pocket; a small bag.
I will not buy a pig in a poke. Camden's Remains.

She suddenly unties the poke,
Which out of it sent such a smoke,
As ready was them all to choke,
So grievous was the pother. Drayton's Nymphid.

My correspondent writes against master's gowns and poke beaves. Spektator, N° 619.
To POKE. v. a. [poka, Swedish.] To feel in the dark; to search any thing with a long instrument.

If these premed eyes be clipped off, they will make use of their protrusions or horns, and poke out their way as before. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.

POKER. n. f. [from poke.] The iron bar with which men stir the fire.
With poker fiery red Crack the stones, and melt the lead. Swift.

If the poker be out of the way, stir the fire with the tongs. Swift's Rules to Servants.
POLAR. adj. [polaire, Fr. from pole.] Found near the pole;
lying near the pole; issuing from the pole.

As when two polar winds, blowing adverse Upon the Cronian sea, together drive Mountains of ice. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.

I doubt
If any suffer on the polar coast,
The rage of Arctos, and eternal frost. Prior.

POLARITY. n. f. [from polar.] Tendency to the pole.
This polarity from refrigeration, upon extremity and defect of a loadstone, might touch a needle any where. Brown.

POLARY. adj. [polaris, Lat.] Tending to the pole; having a direction toward the poles.

Straight gath'ring all his active strength,
He rises higher. Prior.

He ordered to arm long poles with sharp hooks, wherewith they took hold of the tackling which held the mainyard to the mast, then rowing the ship, they cut the tackling, and brought the mainyard by the board. Arbutnot on Coins.

3. A tall piece of timber erected.
Wither'd is the garland of the war,
The soldier's pole is fall'n. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleop.

Live to be the show and gaze o' th' time,
We'll have thee as our rarer monsters are Painted upon a pole, and underwrit,
Here may you see the tyrant. Shakespeare.

4. A measure of length containing five yards and a half.
This ordinance of tithing them by the pole is not only fit for the gentlemen, but also the noblemen. Spenser.

Every pole square of mud, twelve inches deep, is worth six pence a pole to sing out. Mortimer's Husbandry.

5. An instrument of measuring.
A peer of the realm and a counsellor of state are not to be measured by the common yard, but by the pole of special grace. Bacon.

To POLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To furnish with poles.
Begin not to pole your hops. Mortimer's Husbandry.

POLEAXE. n. f. [pole and axe.] An axe fixed to a long pole.
To beat religion into the brains with a poleaxe, is to offer victims of human blood. Howel's England's Tears.

One hung a poleaxe at his saddle bow,
And one a heavy mace to slun the foe. Dryden.

POLCAT. n. f. [Pole or Polish cat, because they abound in Poland.] The fitchew; a stinking animal.
Polecats? there are fairer things than polecats. Shakespeare.

Out of my door, you witch! you hag, you polecat! out, out, out; I'll conjure you. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.

She, at a pin in the wall, hung like a polecat in a warren, to amuse them. L'Estrange.

How should he, harmless youth,
Who kill'd but polecats, learn to murder men. Gay.

POLEDAVIES. n. f. A sort of coarse cloth. Ainsworth.
POLEMICAL. n. f. [πολεμικός.] Controversial; disputative.

I have had but little respite from these polemical exercises, and, notwithstanding all the rage and malice of the adversaries of our church, I sit down contented. Stillington.

The nullity of this distinction has been solidly shewn by most of our polemick writers of the protestant church. South.

The best method to be used with these polemical ladies, is to shew them the ridiculous side of their cause. Addison.

POLEMICK. n. f. Disputant; controvertist.
Each staunch polemick stubborn as a rock,
Came whip and spur. Dunciad, b. iv.

1. A star near the pole, by which navigators compute their northern latitude; cynosure; lodestar.

If a pilot at sea cannot see the polestar, let him steer his course by such stars as best appear to him. King Charles.

I was falling in a vast ocean without other help than the polestar of the ancients. Dryden.

2. Any guide or director.
POLY-MOUNTAIN. n. f. [polium, Lat.] A plant.

The poly-mountain hath a labiated flower, consisting of one leaf, whose stamina supply the place of a crest; the beard is divided into five segments as the germander; out of the flower cup rises the pointal, attended, as it were, by four embryos, which afterward become so many seeds shut up in the flower cup: the flowers are collected into an head upon the top of the stalks and branches. Miller.

POLICE. n. f. [French.] The regulation and government of a city or country, so far as regards the inhabitants.
POLICED. adj. [from police.] Regulated; formed into a regular course of administration.

Where there is a kingdom altogether unable or indignant to govern, it is a just cause of war for another nation, that is civil or policed, to subdue them. Bacon's Holy War.

POLICY. n. f. [πολιτεία; politia, Lat.]
1. The art of government, chiefly with respect to foreign powers.

2. Art; prudence; management of affairs; stratagem.
The policy of that purpose is made more in the marriage, than the love of the parties. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.

If it be honour in your wars to seem
The same you are not, which for your best ends
You call your policy; how is't less or worse,
But it shall hold companionship in peace
With honour as in war. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

If the be curst, it is for policy,
For the's not froward, but modest. Shakespeare.
The best rule of policy, is to prefer the doing of justice before all enjoyments. King Charles.

POLITICIAN. n. f. [politician, Fr.]

1. One versed in the arts of government; one skilled in politics.

Get thee glass eyes,
And, like a curvy politician, seem
To see things thou dost not. Shakef. King Lear.

And 't be as any way, it must be with valour; for policy I hate: I had as lief be a Brownist as a politician. Shakespeare.

Although I may seem less a politician to men, yet I need no secret distinctions nor evasions before God. King Charles.

While empirick politicians use deceit,
Hide what they give, and cure but by a cheat,
You boldly show that skill, which they pretend,
And work by means as noble as your end. Dryden.

Coffee, which makes the politician wife,
And see through all things with his half-shut eyes,
Sent up in vapours to the baron's brain
New stratagems, the radiant lock to gain. Pope.

2. A man of artifice; one of deep contrivance.

Your ill-meaning politician lords,
Under pretence of bridal friends and guests,
Appointed to await me thirty fites. Milton.

POL

If a man succeeds in any attempt, though undertook with never so much rashness, his success shall vouch him a politician, and good luck shall pass for deep contrivance; for give any one fortune, and he shall be thought a wise man. South.

POLITICK. adj. [πολιτικός.]

1. Political; civil. In this sense political is almost always used, except in the phrase body politic.

Virtuously and wisely acknowledging, that he with his people made all but one politick body, whereof himself was the head; even so cared for them as he would for his own limbs. Sidney, l. ii.

No civil or politick constitutions have been more celebrated than his by the best authors. Temple.

2. Prudent; versed in affairs.

This land was famously enrich'd
With politick grave counsel; then the king Had virtuous uncles. Shakef. Richard III.

rank of the community; those who cannot subsist but by the charity of others; but it is sometimes used with laxity for any not rich.
From a confin'd well manag'd store,
You both employ and feed the poor. Waller.
Never any time since the reformation can shew so many poor amongst the widows and orphans of churchmen, as this particular time. Sprat's Sermons.
Has God cast thy lot amongst the poor of this world, by denying thee the plenties of this life, or by taking them away?
this may be preventing mercy; for much mischief riches do to the sons of men. Soub's Sermons.
The poor dare nothing tell but flatt'ring news. Dryden.
11. Barren; dry: as, a poor soil.
12. Lean; starved; emaciated: as, a poor horse.
Where juice wanteth, the language is thin, flagging, poor, starved and scarce covering the bone. Benj. Johnson.
13. Without spirit; flaccid.

from that meanness and poorspiritedness that accompanies guilt. South's Sermons.
- P. P. n. f. [peppysina, Lat.] A small finart quick sound. It is formed from the sound.
I have several ladies, who could not give a pop loud enough to be heard at the farther end of the room, who can now discharge a fan, that it shall make a report like a pocket-pistol. Addison's Spectator, N° 102.
- TO POP. v. n. [from the noun.] To move or enter with a quick, sudden and unexpected motion.
He that kill'd my king,
Pept in between th' election and my hopes. Shaksp.
A boat was sunk and all the folk drowned, saving one only woman, that in her first popping up again, which most living things accustom, espied the boat risen likewise, and floating by her, got hold of the boat, and fast alight upon one of its sides. Carver's Survey of Cornwall.
- I startled at his popping upon me unexpectedly. Addison.
As he scratched to itch up thought, Swift's Miscellanies.
- Forth popp'd the sprite to thin.
Others have a trick of popping up and down every moment, from their paper to the audience, like an idle school-boy. Swift.
- TO POP. v. a.
1. To put out or in suddenly, sily or unexpectedly.
That is my brother's plea,
The which if he can prove, he pops me out
At least from fair five hundred pound a year. Shaksp.

under Brutus and Cassius, and then sunk for ever. Dryden.
Didst thou never pop
Thy head into a tinman's shop? Prior.
2. To shift.
If their curiosity leads them to ask what they should not know, it is better to tell them plainly, that it is a thing that belongs not to them to know, than to pop them off with a falshood. Locke on Education.
- POPE. n. f. [papa, Lat. πάππας.]
1. The bishop of Rome.
I refuse you for my judge; and Appeal unto the pope to be judg'd by him. Shaksp.
He was organist in the pope's chapel at Rome. Peacham.
Christianity has been more oppressed by those that thus fought for it, than those that were in arms against it; upon this score, the pope has done her more harm than the Turk. Decay of Pity.
2. A small fish.
A pope, by some called a ruffe, is much like a perch for shape, but will not grow bigger than a gudgeon: he is an excellent fish, of a pleasant taste, and spawns in April.
Walton's Angler.

fat in the middle of the thigh: why I called I know not.
- POPOUX. n. f. [pop and gun.] A gun with which children play, that only makes a noise.
Life is not weak enough to be destroyed by this popgun artillery of tea and coffee. Cicero.
- POPINJAY. [papegay, Dutch; papagayo, Spanish.]
1. A parrot.
Young popinjays learn quickly to speak. Johnson.
The great red and blue parrot; there are of these greater, the middlemost called popinjays, and the lesser called perroquets. Grev's Museum.
2. A woodpecker. So it seems to be used here.
Terpichore would be expressed, upon her head a coronet of those green feathers of the popinjays, in token of that victory which the mules got of the daughters of Pierius, who were turned into popinjays or woodpeckers. Peacham.
3. A trifling top.
I, all smiting with my wounds, being gall'd
To be so pester'd by a popinjay, Answer'd neglectingly, I know not what. Shaksp.
- POPISH. adj. [from pope.] Taught by the pope; relating to popery; peculiar to popery.
In this sense as they affirm, so we deny, that whatsoever is popish we ought to abrogate. Hooker.
- I know thou art religious,
With twenty popish tricks and ceremonies. Shaksp.
- POPISHLY. adv. [from popish.] With tendency to popery; in a popish manner.
She baffled the many attempts of her enemies, and entirely broke the whole force of that party among her subjects, which was popishly affected. Addison's Freeholder.
- A friend in Ireland, popishly speaking, I believe constantly well disposed towards me. Pope to Swift.
- POPULAR. n. f. [peuplier, Fr. populus, Lat.] A tree.
The leaves of the poplar are broad, and for the most part angular: the male trees produce amentaceous flowers, which have many little leaves and apices, but are barren: the female trees produce membranaceous pods, which open into two parts, containing many seeds, which have a large quantity of down adhering to them, and are collected into spikes. Miller.
- Po is drawn with the face of an ox, with a garland of poplar upon his head. Peacham on Drawing.
- All he describ'd was present to their eyes,
And as he rais'd his verse, the poplars seem'd to rise. Ros.
So falls a poplar, that in watry ground Rais'd high the head. Pope's Iliad.
- POPPY. n. f. [popis, Sax. papaver, Lat.] A plant.
The flower of the poppy, for the most part, consists of four leaves, placed orbicularly, and expanded in form of a rose, out of whose flower cup, consisting of two leaves, rises the point-tal, which afterwards becomes a fruit or pod that is oval or oblong, and adorned with a little head, under which, in some species, is opened a series of holes quite round into the cavity of the fruit, which is defended lengthwise with various leaves or plates, to which a great number of very small seeds adhere: of these are eighteen species: some sort is cultivated for medicinal use; and some suppose it to be the plant whence opium is produced. Miller.

POP

- His temples last with poppies were o'erspread, That nodding seem'd to consecrate his head. Dryden.
Dr. Lister has been guilty of mistake, in the reflections he makes on what he calls the sleeping Cupid with poppy in his hands. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
- POPULACE. n. f. [populace, Fr. from populus, Lat.] The vulgar; the multitude.
Now swarms the populace, a countless throng,
Youth and hoar age tumultuous pour along. Pope.
The tribunes and people having subdued all competitors, began the last game of a prevalent populace, to chuse themselves a master. Swift.
- POPULACEY. n. f. [populace, Fr.] The common people; the multitude.
Under colours of piety ambitious policies march, not only with security, but applause as to the populace. King Charles.
When he thinks one monarch's lust too mild a regiment, he can let in the whole populace of sin upon the soul. D. of Pity.
- POPULAR. adj. [populaire, Fr. popularis, Lat.]
1. Vulgar; plebeian.
I was sorry to hear with what partiality and popular heat decisions were carried in many places. King Charles.
The emmet join'd in her popular tribes
Of commonality. Milton.
So the popular vote inclines. Milton.
2. Suitable to the common people.
Homilies are plain and popular instructions. Hooker.
3. Beloved by the people; pleasing to the people.
It might have been more popular and plausible to vulgar ears, if this first discourse had been spent in extolling the force of laws. Hooker, b. i.
- Such as were popular,
And well-deserving, were advanced by grace. Daniel.
The old general was set aside, and prince Rupert put into the command, which was no popular change. Clarendon.
4. Studious of the favour of the people.
A popular man is, in truth, no better than a prostitute to common fame and to the people. Dryden.
His virtues have undone his country;
Such popular humanity is treason. Addison's Cato.
5. Prevailing or raging among the populace: as, a popular distemper.
POPULARITY. n. f. [popularitas, Lat. popularis, Fr. from popular.]
1. Graciousness among the people; state of being favoured by the people.
The best temper of minds desireth good name and true honour; the lighter, popularity and applause; the more depraved, flattery and tyranny. Bacon.
Your mind has been above the wretched affectation of popularity. Dryden.
- Admire we then,
Or popularity, or stars, or flirings,
The mob's applauses, or the gifts of kings. Pope.
He could be at the head of no factions and cabals, nor attended by a hired rabble, which his flatterers might represent as popularity. Swift.
2. Representation suited to vulgar conception; what affects the vulgar.
The persuader's labour is to make things appear good or evil, which as it may be performed by solid reasons, so it may be represented also by colours, popularities and circumstances, which sway the ordinary judgment. Eucon.
- POPULARLY. adv. [from popular.]
1. In a popular manner; so as to please the crowd.
The victor knight
Bareheaded, popularly low had bow'd,
And paid the salutations of the crowd. Dryden.
Influenc'd by the rabble's bloody will,
With thumbs bent back, they popularly kill. Dryden.
2. According to vulgar conception.
Nor can we excuse the duty of our knowledge, if we only bestow those commendatory conceits, which popularly set forth the eminency thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- TO POPULATE. v. n. [from populus, people.] To breed people.
When there be great shoals of people, which go on to populate, without foreseeing means of life and sustentation, it is of necessity, that once in an age they discharge a portion of their people upon other nations. Bacon's Essays.
- POPULATION. n. f. [from populate.] The state of a country with respect to numbers of people.
The population of a kingdom, especially if it be not mown down by wars, does not exceed the stock of the kingdom, which should maintain them; neither is the population to be reckoned, only by number, but a smaller number, that spend more and earn less, do wear out an estate sooner than a greater number, that live lower, and gather more. Bacon.
- POPULOUSLY. n. f. [from populous.] Populousness; multitude of people.
How it conduceth unto populosity, we shall make but little doubt; there are two main causes of numerosity in any species;
a frequent and multiparous way of breeding. Brown.

POR

- POPULOUS. adj. [populosus, Lat.] Full of people; numerously inhabited.
A wilderness is populous enough,
So Suffolk had thy heav'nly company. Shaksp.
Far the greater part have kept Their station; heav'n yet populous, retains Number sufficient to possess her realms. Milton.
- POPULOUSLY. adv. [from populosus.] With much people.
POPULOUSNESS. n. f. [from populosus.] The state of abounding with people.
This will be allowed by any that considers the vastness, the opulence, the populousness of this region, with the ease and facility wherewith 'tis governed. Temple's Miscellanies.
- PORCELAIN. n. f. [porcelaine, Fr. said to be derived from por-cent amois; because it was believed by Europeans, that the materials of porcelain was matured under ground one hundred years.]
1. China; china ware; fine dishes, of a middle nature between earth and glass, and therefore semi-pellucid.
We have burials in several earthen, where we put divers cements, as the Chinese do their porcelain. Bacon.
We are not thoroughly resolved concerning porcelain or china dishes; that according to common belief, they are made of earth, which lieth in preparation about a hundred years under ground. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
The fine materials made it weak;
Porcelain, by being pure, is apt to break. Dryden.
These look like the workmanship of heav'n:
This is the porcelain clay of human kind,
And therefore cast into these noble molds. Dryden.
2. [Portulaca, Lat.] An herb. Ainsworth.
- PORCH. n. f. [porche, Fr. porticus, Lat.]
1. A roof supported by pillars before a door; an entrance.
Ehad went forth through the porch, and shut the doors of the parlour. Judges iii. 23.
Not infants in the porch of life were free,
The sick, the old, that could but hope a day Longer by nature's bounty, not let stay. Benj. Johnson.
2. A portico; a covered walk.
All this done,
Repair to Pompey's porch, where you shall find us. Shaksp.
- PORCUPINE. n. f. [porc epi or epic, Fr. porcupine, Italian.]
The porcupine, when full grown, is as large as a moderate pig: the quills, with which its whole body is covered, are black on the shoulders, thighs, sides and belly; on the back, hips and loins they are variegated with white and pale brown:
the neck is short and thick, the nose blunt, the nostrils very large in form of slits; the upper lip is slit or cleft as in the hare, and it has whiskers like a cat: the eyes are small, and the ears very like those of the human species: the legs are short, and on the hinder feet are five toes, but only four upon the fore feet, and its tail is four or five inches long, beset with spines in an annular series round it: there is no other difference between the porcupine of Malacca and that of Europe, but that the former grows to a larger size. Hill.
- This stubborn Cade
Fought so long, till that his thighs with darts
Were almost like a sharp-quill'd porcupine. Shakspere.
Long bearded comet tick
Like flaming porcupines to their left sides,
As they would shoot their quills into their hearts. Dryden.
By the black prince of Monomotapa's side were the glaring cat-a-mountain and the quill-darting porcupine. Dr. and Po.
- PORE. n. f. [pore, Fr. pore.]
1. Spiracle of the skin; passage of perspiration.
Witches, carrying in the air, and transforming themselves into other bodies, by ointments and anointing themselves all over, may justly move a man to think, that these fables are the effects of imagination; for it is certain, that ointments do all, if laid on any thing thick, by stopping of the pores, shut in the vapours, and send them to the head extremely. Bac.
- Why was the light
To such a tender ball as th' eye confin'd?
So obvious and so easy to be quench'd,
And not, as feeling through all parts diffus'd,
That the might look at will through every pore. Milton.
2. Any narrow spiracle or passage.
Pores are small interstices between the particles of matter which constitute every body, or between certain aggregates or combinations of them. Quincy.
From veins of vallies milk and nectar broke,
And honey sweating through the pores of oak. Dryden.
- TO PORE. v. n. [pore is the optick nerve; but I imagine pore to come by corruption from some English word.] To look with great intenceness and care; to examine with great attention.
All delights are vain; but that most vain,
Which with pain purchas'd, doth inherit pain;
As painfully to pore upon a book,
To seek the light of truth, while truth the while Doth falsely blind the eyelight. Shaksp.

POR

A book was writ, called Tetrachordon,
The subject new: it walk'd the town a while,
Numb'ring good intellects; now seldom port'd on. Milton.
The eye grows weary, with poring perpetually on the same thing. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
Let him with pedants hunt for praise in books,
Pore out his life amongst the lazy gownmen.
Grow old and vainly proud in fancy'd knowledge. Rosce.
With sharpen'd sight pale antiquaries pore,
Th' inscription value, but the rust adore. Pope.
He hath been poring so long upon Fox's Martyrs, that he imagines himself living in the reign of queen Mary. Swift.
The design is to avoid the imputation of pedantry, to shew that they understand men and manners, and have not been poring upon old unfashionable books. Swift.
PORBLIND. adj. [commonly spoken and written purblind.]
Nearighted; shortighted.
Poreblind men see best in the dimmer light, and likewise have their sight stronger near at hand, than those that are not poreblind, and can read and write smaller letters; for that the spirits visual in those that are poreblind are thinner and rarer than in others, and therefore the greater light disperleth them. Bacon's Natural History.
PORINESS. n. f. [from pory.] Fullness of pores.
I took off the dressings, and fet the trepan above the fractured bone, considering the poriness of the bone below. Wifem.
PORISTICK method. n. f. [ποριστικός.] In mathematics, is that which determines when, by what means, and how many different ways a problem may be solved. DiD.
PORK. n. f. [porc, Fr. porcus, Lat.] Swines flesh unfalted.
You are no good member of the commonwealth; for, in converting Jews to christians, you raise the price of pork.
Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
All flesh full of nourishment, as beef and pork, increase the matter of phlegm. Floyer on the Humours.
PORKER. n. f. [from pork.] A hog; a pig.
Strait to the lodgments of his herd he run,
Where the fat porkers slept beneath the sun. Pope.
PORKER. n. f. [pork and cater.] One who feeds on pork.
This making of christians will raise the price of hogs; if we grow all to be porkers, we shall not shortly have a rather on the coals for money. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
PORKET. [from pork.] A young hog.
And off-rings to the flaming altars bears;
A porket, and a lamb that never suffer'd shears. Dryden.
PORKLING. n. f. [from pork.] A young pig.
A hovel
Will serve thee in winter, moreover than that,
To shut up thy porklings, thou meanest to fat. Tupper.
POROSITY. n. f. [from porous.] Quality of having pores.
This is a good experiment for the disclosure of the nature of colours; which of them require a finer porosity, and which a grosser. Bacon's Natural History.
POROUS. adj. [poretus, Fr. from porc.] Having small spiracles or passages.
The rapid current, which through veins
Of porous earth with kindly thirst updrawn,
Rose a fresh fountain, and with many a rill Water'd the garden. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iv.
Of light the greater part he took, and plac'd
In the sun's orb, made porous to receive And drink the liquid light; firm to retain Her gather'd beams; great palace now of light. Milton.
POROUSNESS. n. f. [from porous.] The quality of having pores.
They will forcibly get into the porousness of it, and pass between part and part, and separate the parts of that thing one from another; as a knife doth a solid substance, by having its thinnest parts pressed into it. Digby on Bodies.
PORPHYRE. n. f. [from πορφύρα; porphyrites, Lat. porphyre, porphyry.] Fr. Marble of a particular kind.
I like best the porphyry, white or green marble, with a mullar or upper stone of the same. Peacham on Drawing.
Consider the red and white colours in porphyre; hinder light but from striking on it, its colours vanish, and produce no such ideas in us; but upon the return of light, it produces these appearances again. Locke.
PORPOISE. n. f. [porc poisson, Fr.] The sea-hog.
PORPUS. n. f. [porc poisson, Fr.] The sea-hog.
Amphibious animals link the terrestrial and aquatic together; seals live at land and at sea, and porpoises have the warm blood and entrails of a hog. Locke.
Parch'd with unextinguish'd thirst,
Small beer I guzzle till I burst;
And then I drag a bloated corpus Swell'd with a drop like a porpus. Swift.
PORFACIOUS. adj. [porfacus, Lat. porface, Fr.] Greenish.
If the lesser intestines be wounded, he will be troubled with porfaceous vomiting. Wifem's Surgery.
PORRET. n. f. [porrum, Lat.] A scallion.
It is not an easy problem to resolve why garlick, molys and porrets have white roots, deep green leaves and black seeds. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PORRIDGE. n. f. [more properly porrage; porrata, low Latin, from porrum, a leek.] Food made by boiling meat in water; broth.
I had as lief you should tell me of a mess of porridge, Sho.
PORRIDGEPOT. n. f. [porridge and pot.] The pot in which meat is boiled for a family.
PORRINGER. n. f. [from porridge.]
1. A vessel in which broth is eaten.
A small wax candle put in a socket of brass, then set upright in a porringer full of spirit of wine, then set both the candle and spirit of wine on fire, and you shall see the flame of the candle become four times bigger than otherwise, and appear globular. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
A physician undertakes a woman with sore eyes, who dawbs 'em quite up with ointment, and, while she was in that pickle, carries off a porringer. L'Estrange.
The porringers, that in a row
Hung high, and made a glittering show,
Were now but leathern buckets rang'd. Swift.
2. It seems in Shakespeare's time to have been a word of contempt for a headpiece; of which perhaps the first of these passages may show the reason.
Here is the cap your worship did bespeak.
—Why this was moulded on a porringer. Shakespeare.
A haberdasher's wife of small wit rail'd upon me, till her pink'd porringer fell off her head. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
PORRECTION. n. f. [porrectio, Latin.] The act of reaching forth.
PORTR. n. f. [ports, Fr. portus, Latin.]
1. A harbour; a safe station for ships.
Her small gondelay her port did make,
And that gay pair issuing on the shore,
Disburden'd her. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
I should be still Peering in maps for ports, and ways and roads. Shakespeare.
The earl of Newcastle seized upon that town; when there was not one port town in England, that avowed their obedience to the king. Clarendon, b. viii.
A weather beaten vessel holds Gladly the port. Milton.
2. [Porta, Lat. portus, Sax. porte, Fr.] A gate.
Shew all thy praises within the ports of the daughter of Sion. Psalms ix. 14.
Descend, and open your uncharged ports. Shakespeare.
He I accuse,
The city ports by this hath entered. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
O polih'd perturbation! golden care!
That keep't the ports of slumber open wide
To many a watchful night; sleep with it now!
Yet not to found, and half so deeply sweet,
As he, whose brow with homely biggen bound,
Snored out the watch of night. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
The mind of man hath two ports; the one always frequented by the entrance of manifold vanities; the other desolate and overgrown with grass, by which enter our charitable thoughts and divine contemplations. Religh.
From their ivory port the cherubim Forth issu'd. Milton.
3. The aperture in a ship, at which the gun is put out.
At Portsmouth the Mary Rose, by a little sway of the ship in casting about, her ports being within sixteen inches of the water, was overset and lost. Religh.
The linlocks touch, the pond'rous ball expires,
The vig'rous seaman every port hole plies.
And adds his heart to every gun he fires. Dryden.
4. [Porte, Fr.] Carriage; air; mien; manner; bearing;
external appearance; demeanour.
In that proud port, which her so goodly graceth,
Whiles her fair face she rears up to the sky,
And to the ground her eyelids low embraceth,
Most goodly temperature ye may descry. Spenser.
Think you much to pay two thousand crowns,
And bear the name and port of gentleman?
See Godfrey there in purple clad and gold,
His stately port and princely look behold. Fairfax.
Their port was more than human, as they flood;
I took it for a fairy vision
Of some gay creatures of the element.
That in the colours of the rainbow live. Milton.
A proud man is so far from making himself great by his haughty and contemptuous port, that he is usually punished with neglect for it. Cellier on Pride.
Now lay the line, and measure all thy court,
By inward virtue, not external port;
And find whom justly to prefer above
The man on whom my judgment plac'd my love. Dryden.
Thy plummy crest
Nods horrible, with more terrific port
Thou walk'st, and seem'st already in the fight. Philips.

To PORTR

POR

To PORTR. v. a. [porta, Lat. porter, Fr.] To carry in form.
Th' angelick squadron bright
Turn'd fiery red, sharpening in mooned horns
Their phalanx, and began to hem him round
With ported spears. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iv.
PORTABLE. adj. [portabilis, Lat.]
1. Manageable by the hand.
2. Such as may be born along with one.
The pleasure of the religious man is an easy and portable pleasure, such an one as he carries about in his bosom, without alarming the eye or envy of the world. South.
3. Such as is transported or carried from one place to another.
Most other portable commodities decay quickly in their use; but money is by slower degrees removed from, or brought into the free commerce of any country, than the greatest part of other merchandize. Locke.
4. Sufferable; supportable.
How light and portable my pains seem now,
When that which makes me bend, makes the king bow.
Shakespeare's King Lear.
All these are portable Shakespeare's Macbeth.
With other graces weigh'd.
PORTABLENESS. n. f. [from portable.] The quality of being portable.
PORTAGE. n. f. [portage, Fr.]
1. The price of carriage.
2. [From port.] Porthole.
Lend the eye a terrible aspect;
Let it pry through the portage of the head,
Like the brass cannon. Shakespeare's Henry V.
PORTAL. n. f. [portalis, Fr. po tellis, Italian.] A gate; the arch under which the gate opens.
King Richard doth appear,
As doth the blushing discontented sun,
From out the fiery portal of the east. Shakespeare's Rich. II.
Though I should run
To those disclosing portals of the sun;
And walk his way, until his horses sleep
Their fiery locks in the Iberian deep. Sandys.
He through heav'n
That open'd wide her blazing portals, led To God's eternal house direct the way. Milton.
The flick for air before the portal gap.
The portal consists of a composite order unknown to the ancients. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
PORTANCE. n. f. [from porter, Fr.] Air; mien; port; demcanour.
There stepped forth a goodly lady,
That seem'd to be a woman of great worth,
And by her stately posture born of heav'nly birth. F. 2n.
Your loves,
Thinking upon his services, took from you
The apprehension of his present portance,
Which gibingly, ungravelly, he did fashion. Shakespeare.
PORTASS. n. f. [sometimes called portais, and by Chaucer porthofs.] A breviary; a prayer book.
In his hand his portais fill he bare,
That much was worn, but therein little red;
For of devotion he had little care. Fairy Queen.
An old priest always read in his portais mumpimus domine for mumpimus; whereof when he was admonished, he said that he now had used mumpimus thirty years, and would not leave his old mumpimus for their new mumpimus. Camden.
PORTCULLIS. n. f. [portecullis, Fr. quali porta clausa.] A portcullis. } sort of machine like a harrow, hung over the gates of a city, so be let down to keep out an enemy.
Over it a fair portcullis hung,
Which to the gate directly did incline,
With comely compass and compaction frong, F. 2n.
Neither unevenly short, nor yet exceeding long.
The cannon against St. Stephen's gate executed so well, that the portcullis and gate were broken, and entry opened into the city. Hayward.
She the huge portcullis high up drew,
Which but herself, not all the Stygian pow'rs Cou'd once have mov'd. Milton.
Pyrrhus comes, neither men nor walls
His force sustain, the torn portcullis falls. Denham.
The upper eyelid claps down, and is as good a fence as a portcullis against the importunity of the enemy. More.
The gates are opened, the portcullis drawn;
And deluges of armies from the town
Come pouring in. Dryden.
To PORTCULLIS. v. a. [from the noun.] To bar; to shut up.
Within my mouth you have engorg'd my tongue,
Doubly portcullis'd with my teeth and lips. Shakespeare.
PORTED. adj. [porter, Fr.] Borne in a certain or regular order.
They hem him round with ported spears. Milton.
To PORTEND. v. a. [portend, Lat.] To foretoken; to foreshow as omens.

True opener of mine eyes,
Much better seems this vision, and more hope
Of peaceful days portends, than those two past. Milton.
True poets are the guardians of a state,
And when they fail, portend approaching fate. Rowson.
The ruin of the state in the destruction of the church, is not only portended as its sign, but also inferred from it as its cause. South's Sermons.
PORTENSION. n. f. [from portend.] The act of foretoking.
Although the red comets do carry the portensions of Mars, the brightly white should be of the influence of Venus. Brown.
PORTENT. n. f. [portentum, Lat.] Omen of ill; prodigy foretoking misery.
O, what portents are these?
Some heavy business hath my lord in hand,
And I must know it. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
My loss by dire portents the god foretold;
You riven oak, the fairest of the green. Dryden.
PORTENTOUS. adj. [portentosus, Lat. from portent.] Monstrous; prodigious; foretoking ill.
They are portentous things Unto the climate, that they point at.
This portentous figure
Comes armed through our watch to like the king
That was. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Overlay
With this portentous bridge the dark abyss. Milton.
No beast of more portentous lize
In the Hercinian forest lies. Rowson.
Let us look upon them as so many prodigious exceptions from our common nature, as so many portentous animals, like the strange unnatural productions of Africa. South.
Every unwonted meteor is portentous, and some divine prognostick. Glanvil.
The petticoat will shrink at your first coming to town; at least a touch of your pen will make it contract itself, and by that means obliges several who are terrified or astonish'd at this portentous novelty. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup> 127.
PORTER. n. f. [portier, Fr. from porta, Lat. a gate.]
1. One that has the charge of the gate.
Porter, remember what I give in charge,
And, when you've so done, bring the keys to me. Shakespeare.
Arm all my household presently, and charge
The porter he let no man in till day. Benj. Johnson.
Nic. Frog demanded to be his porter, and his fishmonger, to keep the keys of his gates, and furnish the kitchen. Arb.
2. One who waits at the door to receive messengers.
A fav're porter with his master vie,
Be brib'd as often, and as often lie. Pope.
3. [Porteur, Fr. from porta, Lat. to carry.] One who carries burthens for hire.
It is with kings sometimes as with porters, whose packs may jostle one against the other, yet remain good friends still. Havel.
By porter, who can tell, whether I mean a man who bears burthens, or a servant who waits at a gate? Watts.
PORTERAGE. n. f. [from porter.] Money paid for carriage.
PORTESSE. n. f. A breviary. See PORTASS.
PORTGLAIVE. n. f. [porter and glaiive, Fr. and Eric.] A sword bearer. Amfworth.
PORTGRAVE. n. f. [porta, Lat. and grave, Teut. a keeper.]
PORTGREVE. } The keeper of a gate. Obsolete.
PORTICO. n. f. [porticus, Lat. portico, Italian; portique, Fr.]
A covered walk; a piazza.
The rich their wealth bestow
On some expensive airy portico;
Where safe from showers they may be born in state,
And free from tempests for fair weather wait. Dryden.
PORTION. n. f. [portion, Fr. portio, Latin.]
1. A part.
These are parts of his ways, but how little a portion is heard of him? Job xxvi. 14.
Like favour find the Irish, with like fate
Advanc'd to be a portion of our state. Waller.
In battles won, fortune a part did claim,
And soldiers have their portion in the fame. Waller.
Those great portions or fragments fell into the abyss; some in one posture, and some in another. Burnet.
Pierish no small portion of the war
Pre's'd on, and thook his lance. Dryden.
2. A part assigned; an allotment; a dividend.
Here their pris'n ordain'd and portion set. Milton.
Should you no honey vow to taste,
But what the master-bees have plac'd
In compass of their cells, how small
A portion to your share would fall? Waller.

Of words they seldom know more than the grammatical construction, unless they are born with a poetical genius, which is a rare portion amongst them. Dryden.

As soon as any good appears to make a part of their portion of happiness, they begin to desire it. Locke.

When he considers the manifold temptations of poverty and riches, and how fatally it will affect his happiness to be overcome by them, he will join with Agur in petitioning God for the safer portion of a moderate convenience. Rogers.

One or two faults are easily to be remedied with a very small portion of abilities. Swift.

3. Part of an inheritance given to a child; a fortune. Leave to thy children tumult, strife and war, Portions of toil, and legacies of care. Prior.

4. A wife's fortune. To PORTION, v. a. [from the noun.] 1. To divide; to parcel. The gods who portion out The lots of princes as of private men, Have put a bar between his hopes and empire. Rousseau. Argos the feat of Iove's rule I chose, Where my Ulysses and his race might reign, And portion to his tribes the wide domain. Pope.

2. To endow with a fortune. Him portion'd maids, apprentic'd orphans blest, The young who labour, and the old who rest. Pope.

PORTIONER, n. f. [from portion.] One that divides. PORTLINESS, n. f. [from portly.] Dignity of mien; grandeur of demeanour. Such pride is praise, such portliness is honour, That boldness innocence bears in her eyes; And her fair countenance like a goodly banner Spreads in defiance of all enemies. Spenser. When subtilties combineth with delightfulness, fulness with fineness, seemliness with portliness, and currentness with staydness, how can the language sound other than most full of sweetness? Camden's Remains.

PORTLY, adj. [from port.] 1. Grand of mien. Rudely thou wrong'st my dear heart's desire, In finding fault with her too portly pride. Spenser. Your Argosies with portly fail, Like signiors and rich burghers on the flood, Or as it were the pageants of the sea, Do overpeer the petty traffickers. Shakespeare. A portly prince, and goodly to the fight, He seem'd a son of Anak for his height. Dryden.

2. Bulky; swelling. A goodly, portly man and a corpulent; of a cheerful look, a pleasing eye, and a most noble carriage. Shakespeare. Our house little deserves The scourge of greatness to be used on it; And that same greatness too, which our own hands Have help'd to make so portly. Shakespeare. Henry IV. PORTMAN, n. f. [from port and man.] An inhabitant or burgess, as those of the cinque ports. Dist. PORTMANTEAU, n. f. [from port and tau.] A chest or bag in which cloaths are carried. I desired him to carry one of my portmantaux; but he laughed, and bid another do it. Spektator.

PORTOUSE, n. f. In sea language, a ship is said to ride a portouse, when she rides with her yards struck down to the deck. Dist. PORTRAIT, n. f. [from portrait, Fr.] A picture drawn after the life. As this idea of perfection is of little use in portraits, or the resemblances of particular persons, so neither is it in the characters of comedy and tragedy, which are always to be drawn with some specks of frailty, such as they have been described in history. Dryden's Dufresney. The figure of his body was strong, proportionable, beautiful; and were his picture well drawn, it must deserve the praise given to the portraits of Raphael. Prior.

To PORTRAIT, v. a. [from portrait, Fr. from portray.] To draw; to portray. It is perhaps ill copied, and should be written in the following examples portray. In most exquisite pictures, they blaze and portray not only the dainty lineaments or beauty, but also round about shadow the rude thickets and craggy cliffs. Spenser. I portray in Arthur before he was king, the image of a brave knight, perfected in the twelve private moral virtues. Spenser.

PORTRAITURE, n. f. [from portraiture, Fr. from portray.] Picture; painted resemblance. By the image of my cause I see The portraiture of his. Shakespeare. Hamlet. Let some strange mysterious dream, Wave at his wings in airy stream Of lively portraiture display'd, Softly on my eye-lids laid. Milton. Herein was also the portraiture of a hart. Brown.

POS

This is the portraiture of our earth, drawn without flattery. Burnet's Theory of the Earth. Her wry-mouth'd portraiture Display'd the fates her confidors endure. He delineates and gives us the portraiture of a perfect orator. Baker's Reflections on Learning.

To PORTRAY, v. a. [from portraire, Fr.] 1. To paint; to describe by picture. The Earl of Warwick's ragged staff is yet to be seen portrayed in many places of their church steeple. Take a tile, and so portray upon it the city Jerusalem. Ex. Our Phenix queen was portrayed too bright, Beauty alone could beauty take to right. Dryden.

2. To adorn with pictures. Shields Various, with boastful argument portray'd. Milton. PORTRESS, n. f. [from porter.] A female guardian of a gate. Janitrix. The portress of hell-gate reply'd. Milton's Par. Lost. The shoes put on, our faithful portress Admits us in to storm the fort; While like a cat with walnuts shod, Stumbling at every step she trod. Swift's Miscel.

PO'AWIGLE, n. f. A tadpole or young frog not yet fully shaped. That black and round substance began to grow oval, after a while the head, the eyes, the tail to be discernible, and at last to become that which the ancients called gyrnus, we a po'awigle or tadpole. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PO'RY, adj. [from porcus, Fr. from porc.] Full of pores. To the court arriv'd th' admiring son Beholds the vaulted roofs of porry stone. Dryden.

To POSE, v. a. [from pose, an old word signifying knaviness or stupefaction. gospel. Skinner.] 1. To puzzle; to gravel; to put to a stand or stop. Learning was pos'd, philosophy was fet, Sophisters taken in a filiter's net How God's eternal son should be man's brother, Po'st his proudest intellectual power. Crofton. As an evidence of human infirmities, I shall give the following instances of our intellectual blindness, not that I design to pose them with those common enigmas of magnetism. Clarendon's Speech. Particularly in learning of languages, there is least occasion for posing of children. Locke on Education.

2. To apose; to interrogate. She in the presence of others pos'd him and sifted him, thereby to try whether he were indeed the very duke of York or no. Bacon's Henry VII.

POSER, n. f. [from pose.] One that asketh questions to try capacities; an examiner. He that questioneth much, shall learn much; but let his questions not be troublesome, for that is fit for a poser. Bacon.

POSSED, adj. [from posse, Lat. It has the appearance of a participle preter, but it has no verb.] Placed; ranged. That the principle that sets on work these organs is nothing else but the modification of matter, or the natural motion thereof thus, or thus posited or disposed, is most apparently false. Hale's Origin of Manhood.

POSITION, n. f. [from positio, Lat.] 1. State of being placed; situation. Iron having stood long in a window, being thence taken, and by the help of a cork balanced in water, where it may have a free mobility, will bewray a kind of inquietude till it attain the former position. Watson. They are the happiest regions for fruits, by the excellence of soil, the position of mountains, and the frequency of streams. Since no one sees all, and we have different prospects of the same things, according to our different positions to it, it is not incongruous to try whether another may not have notions that escaped him. Locke. By varying the position of my eye, and moving it nearer to or farther from the direct beam of the sun's light, the colour of the sun's reflected light constantly varied upon the speculum as it did upon my eye. Newton's Opticks. We have a different prospect of the same thing, according to the different position of our understandings toward it. Watson. Place ourselves in such a position toward the object, or place the object in such a position toward our eye, as may give us the clearest representation of it; for a different position greatly alters the appearance of bodies. Watson's Logic.

2. Principle laid down. Of any offence or sin therein committed against God, with what conscience can ye accuse us, when your own positions be are, that the things we observe should every one of them be dearer unto us than ten thousand lives. Let not the proof of any positions depend on the position that follow, but always on those which go before. Watson.

3. Advancement of any principle. A fallacious illusion is to conclude from the position of the antecedent unto the position of the consequent, or the remotion of the consequent to the remotion of the antecedent. Watson.

POS

4. [In grammar.] The state of a vowel placed before two consonants, as pempous; or a double consonant, as axle. POSITIONAL, adj. [from position.] Respecting position. The leaves of cataputa or spurge plucked upwards or downwards, performing their operations by-purge or vomit; as old wives still do preach, is a strange conceit, ascribing unto plants positional operations. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

POSITIVE, adj. [from positivus, Lat. positif, Fr.] 1. Not negative; capable of being affirmed; real; absolute. The power or blossom is a positive good, although the remove of it, to give place to the fruit, be a comparative good. Bacon. Hardness carries somewhat more of positive in it than impenetrability, which is negative; and is perhaps more a consequence of solidity, than solidity itself. Locke. Whatsoever doth or can exist, or be considered as one thing, is positive; and so not only simple ideas and substances, but modes also are positive beings, though the parts, of which they consist, are very often relative one to another. Locke.

2. Absolute; particular; direct; not implied. As for positive words, that he would not bear arms against king Edward's son; though the words seem calm, yet it was a plain and direct over-ruling of the king's title. Bacon.

3. Dogmatical; ready to lay down notions with confidence; stubborn in opinion. I am sometimes doubting, when I might be positive, and sometimes confident out of season. Rymer. Some positive perfluting fops we know, That, if once wrong, will needs be always so; But you, with pleasure own your errors past, And make each day a critick on the last. Pope.

4. Settled by arbitrary appointment. In laws, that which is natural, bindeth universally, that which is positive, not so. Hooker. Although no laws but positive be mutable, yet all are not mutable which be positive; positive laws are either permanent or else changeable, according as the matter itself is, concerning which they were made. Hooker. Laws are but positive; love's pow'r we see, Is nature's sanction, and her first decree. Dryden.

5. Having the power to enact any law. Not to consent to the enacting of such a law, which has no view besides the general good, unless another law shall at the same time pass, with no other view but that of advancing the power of one party alone; what is this but to claim a positive voice, as well as a negative. Swift.

6. Certain; assured. Positively, adv. [from positive.] 1. Absolutely; by way of direct position. Give me some breath, some little pause, Before I positively speak in this. Shakespeare. Rich. III. The good or evil, which is removed, may be esteemed good or evil comparatively, and not positively or simply. Bacon. Not negatively. It is impossible that any successive duration should be actually and positively infinite, or have infinite successions already gone and past. Bentley's Sermons.

2. Certainly; without dubitation. It was absolutely certain, that this part was positively yours, and could not possibly be written by any other. Dryden.

3. Peremptorily; in strong terms. I would ask any man, that has but once read the bible, whether the whole tenor of the divine law does not positively require humility and meekness to all men. Sprat.

POSITIVENESS, n. f. [from positive.] 1. Actuality; not mere negation. The positiveness of sins of commission lies both in the habitude of the will and in the executed act too; whereas the positiveness of sins of omission is in the habitude of the will only. Norris. 2. Peremptoriness; confidence. This peremptoriness is of two sorts; the one a magisterialness in matters of opinion and speculation, the other a positiveness in relating matters of fact; in the one we impose upon men's understandings, in the other on their faith. Government of the Tongue. Confidence. A low word. Courage and positiveness are never more necessary than on such an occasion; but it is good to join some argument with them of real and convincing force, and let it be strongly pronounced too. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

POSITURE, n. f. [from positura, Lat.] The manner in which any thing is placed. Supposing the positure of the party's hand who did throw the dice, and supposing all other things, which did concur to the production of that cast, to be the very same they were, there is no doubt but in this case the cast is necessary. Bramb.

POSNET, n. f. [from posnet, Fr. Skinner.] A little basin; a porringer; a skillet. To make proof of the incorporation of silver and tin in equal quantity, and also whether it yield no softness more than silver; and again whether it will endure the ordinary fire, which belongeth to chaffing-dishes, posnets and such other silver vessels. Bacon.

POSSE, n. f. [Latin.] An armed power; from posse comitatus, the power of the shires. A low word. The posse comitatus, the power of the whole county, is legally committed unto him. Bacon. As if the passion that rules, were the sheriff of the place, and came with all the posse, the understanding is seized. Locke.

To POSSESS, v. a. [from posse, Lat. posseder, Fr.] 1. To have as an owner; to be master of; to enjoy or occupy actually. She will not let instructions enter Where folly now possesses? Shakespeare. Cymbeline. Record a gift, Here in the court, of all he dies possess'd. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice. Sundry more gentlemen this little hundred possesseth and possessioneth. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

2. To seize; to obtain. The English marched towards the river Elbe, intending to possess a hill called Under-Elke. Hayward.

3. To give possession or command of any thing; to make master of. It has of before that which is possessed; sometimes anciently with. Is he yet possest, How much you would? Shakespeare. —Ay, ay, three thousand ducats. This man, whom hand to hand I flew in fight, May be possest with some store of crowns. Shakespeare. This possest us of the most valuable blessing of human life, friendship. Government of the Tongue. Seem I to thee sufficiently possest? Of happiness or not, who am alone From all eternity? Milton's Par. Lost, b. viii. I hope to possess chymists and corpufcularians of the advantages to each party, by confederacy between them. Boyle. The intent of this fable is to possess us of a just sense of the vanity of these craving appetites. L'Estrange. Whole houses, of their whole desires possest, Are often ruin'd at their own request. Dryden. Of fortune's favour long possest, He was with one fair daughter only blest. Dryden. We possest ourselves of the kingdom of Naples, the dutchy of Milan and the avenue of France in Italy. Addison. Endowed with the greatest perfections of nature, and possest of all the advantages of external condition, Solomon could not find happiness. Prior.

4. To fill with something fixed. It is of unpeakable advantage to possess our minds with an habitual good intention, and to aim all our thoughts, words and actions at some laudable end. Addison. Those, under the great officers, know every little case that is before the great man, and if they are possest with honest minds, will consider poverty as a recommendation. Addison.

5. To have power over, as an unclean spirit. Beware what spirit rages in your breast; For ten inspir'd, ten thousand are possest. Roscommon. Inspir'd within, and yet possest without. Clarendon. I think, that the man is possest. Swift.

6. To affect by intestine power. He's possest with greatness, And speaks not to himself, but with a pride That quarrels at self-breath. Shakespeare. Tril. and Cref. Let not your ears despise my tongue, Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound That ever yet they heard. Shakespeare. Possest with rumours full of idle dreams, Not knowing what they fear, but full of fear. Shakespeare. What fury, O son, Possest thee, to bend that mortal dart Against thy father's head? Milton's Par. Lost, b. ii. With the rage of all their race possest, Stung to the soul the brothers start from rest. Pope.

POSSESSION, n. f. [from possession, Fr. possessione, Lat.] 1. The state of owning or having in one's own hands or power; property. He shall inherit her, and his generation shall hold her in possession. Ecclus. iv. 16. In possession such, not only of right, I call you. Milton.

2. The thing possessed. Do nothing to lose the best possession of life, that of honour and truth. A man has no right over another's life, by his having a property in land and possession. Locke. To POSSESS, v. a. To invest with property. Obsolete. Sundry more gentlemen this little hundred possessioneth and possessioneth. Carew.

POSSESSOR, n. f. [from possession.] Master; one that has the power or property of any thing. They were people, whom having been of old freemen and possessioners, the Lacedemonians had conquered. Sidney.

POSSESSIVE, 20 C

POSSESSIVE. adj. [possessivus, Lat.] Having possession.
 POSSESSORY. adj. [possessivus, Fr. from posséder.] Having possession.
 This he detains from the ivy much against his will; for he should be the true possessory lord thereof. Howel.
 POSSESSOUR. n. f. [possessor, Lat. possesseur, Fr.] Owner; master; proprietor.

Thou profoundest hell
 Receive thy new possessor. Milton.
 A considerable difference lies between the honour of men for natural and acquired excellencies and divine graces, that those having more of human nature in them, the honour doth more directly redound to the possessor of them. Stillington.
 'Twas the interest of those, who thirsted after the possessions of the clergy, to represent the possessors in as vile colours as they could. Atterbury's Sermons.
 POSSET. n. f. [posca, Lat.] Milk curdled with wine or any acid.

We'll have a posset at the latter end of a feacal fire. Shak.
 In came the bridemaids with the posset.
 The bridegroom eat in spite. Suckling.
 I allowed him medicated broths, posset ale and pearl julep. Wifeman's Surgery.

A sparing diet did her health assure;
 Or sick, a pepper posset was her cure. Dryden.
 The cure of the stone consists in vomiting with posset drink, in which althea roots are boiled. Floyer on the Humours.
 Increase the milk when it is diminished by the too great use of flesh meats, by gruels and posset drink. Arbutnot.
 To POSSET. v. a. [from the noun.] To turn; to curdle: as milk with acids. Not used.

Swift as quicksilver it courses through
 The nat'ral gates and allies of the body;
 And, with a sudden vigour, it doth posset
 And curd, like cager droppings into milk,
 The thin and wholesome blood. Shaksp. Hamlet.

POSSIBILITY. n. f. [possibilitas, Fr.] The power of being in any manner; the state of being possible.

There is no let, but that as often as those books are read, and need to requireth, the file of their differences may expressly be mentioned to bar even all possibility of error. Hooker.

Brother, speak with possibilities.
 And do not break into these woeful extremes. Shaksp.
 Consider him antecedently to his creation, while he yet lay in the barren womb of nothing, and only in the number of possibilities; and consequently could have nothing to recommend him to Christ's affection. South's Sermons.

A bare possibility, that a thing may be or not be, is no just cause of doubting whether a thing be or not. Tillotson.
 According to the multifarioussness of this imitability, so are the possibilities of being. Norris.

Example not only teaches us our duty, but convinces us of the possibility of our imitation. Rogers's Sermons.
 POSSIBLE. adj. [possibile, Fr. possibilis, Lat.] Having the power to be or to be done; not contrary to the nature of things.

Admit all these impossibilities and great absurdities to be possible and convenient. Whitgift.
 With men this is impossible, but with God all things are possible. Mat. xix. 26.

All things are possible to him that believeth. Mar. ix. 23.
 Firm we submit, but possible to swear. Milton.
 It will scarce seem possible, that God should engrave principles in men's minds in words of uncertain signification. Locke.
 Set a pleasure tempting, and the hand of the Almighty visibly prepared to take vengeance, and tell whether it be possible for people wantonly to offend against the law. Locke.

POSSIBLY. adv. [from possible.]
 1. By any power really existing.
 Within the compass of which laws, we do not only comprehend whatsoever may be easily known to belong to the duty of all men, but even whatsoever may possibly be known to be of that quality. Hooker, b. i. f. 8.

Can we possibly his love desert?
 2. Perhaps; without absurdity.
Possibly he might be found in the hands of the earl of Essex, but he would be dead first. Clarendon, b. viii.

Arbitrary power tends to make a man a bad sovereign, who might possibly have been a good one, had he been invested with an authority circumscrib'd by laws. Addison.
 POST. n. f. [poste, Fr. equus postis curvor.]

1. A hasty messenger; a courier who comes and goes at stated times; commonly a letter carrier.
 In certain places there be always fresh posts, to carry that farther which is brought unto them by the other. Abbot.
 These I'll rake up, the post unanctified
 Of murtherous lechers. Shaksp. King Lear.

I fear my Julia would not design my lines, Receiving them by such a worthless post. Shaksp.
 A cripple in the way out-travels a footman, or a post out of the way. Dryd. Johnson's Disson.

I send you the fair copy of the poem on dulness, which I should not care to hazard by the common post. Pope.

2. To fix opprobriously on posts.
 Many gentlemen, for their integrity in their votes, were, by posting their names, exposed to the popular calumny and fury. King Charles.

On pain of being posted to your sorrow,
 Fail not, at four, to meet me. Graville.
 2. To place;

Quick count of manner of travelling. This is the sense in which it is taken; but the expression seems elliptical to ride post, is to ride as a post, or to ride in the manner of a post; whence Shakespeare, to ride in post.
 I brought my master news of Juliet's death,
 And then in post he came from Mantua.
 To this same monument. Shaksp. Romeo and Juliet.
 Sent from Media post to Egypt. Milton.
 He who rides post through an unknown country, cannot distinguish the situation of places. Dryden.

3. [Poste, Fr. from positus, Lat.] Situation; seat.
 The waters rise every where upon the surface of the earth; which new post, when they had once seized on, they would never quit. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
 4. Military station.
 See before the gate what stalking ghost
 Commands the guard, what sentries keep the post. Dryd.
 As I watch'd the gates,
 Lodg'd on my post, a herald is arriv'd
 From Cæsar's camp. Addison's Cato.
 Whatever spirit careles of his charge
 His post neglects, or leaves the fair at large,
 Shall feel sharp vengeance. Pope.
 Each of the Grecian captains he represents conquering a single Trojan, while Diomed encounters two at once; and when they are engaged, each in his distinct post, he only is drawn fighting in every quarter. Pope.
 5. Place; employment; office.
 Every man has his post assigned to him, and in that station he is well, if he can but think himself so. L'Estrange.
 False men are not to be taken into confidence, nor fearful men into a post that requires resolution. L'Estrange.
 Without letters a man can never be qualified for any considerable post in the camp; for courage and corporal force, unless joined with conduct, the usual effects of contemplation, is no more fit to command than a tempest. Collier.
 While you, my lord, the rural shades admire,
 And from Britannia's publick posts retire,
 Me into foreign realms my fate conveys. Addison.
 Certain laws, by suff'ers thought unjust,
 Deny'd all posts of profit or of trust. Pope.

POTENTIAL. adj. [potenciel, Fr. potentialis, Latin.]

1. Existing in possibility, not in act.

This potential and imaginary materia prima cannot exist without form.

2. Having the effect without the external actual property.

The magnifico is much belov'd, And hath in his effect a voice potential;

As double as the duke's.

Ice doth not only submit unto actual heat, but indureth not the potential calidity of many waters.

3. Efficacious; powerful.

Thou must make a dullard of the world, If they not thought the profits of my death Were very pregnant and potential spurs

To make thee seek it.

4. In grammar, potential is a mood denoting the possibility of doing any action.

POTENTIALITY. n. f. [from potential.] Possibility; not actually.

Manna represented to every man the taste himself did like, but it had in its own potentiality all those tastes and dispositions eminently.

God is an eternal substance and act, without potentiality and matter, the principle of motion, the cause of nature.

The true notion of a soul's eternity is this, that the future moments of its duration can never be all past and present; but still there will be a futurity and potentiality of more for ever and ever.

POTENTIALITY. adv. [from potential.]

1. In power or possibility; not in act or positively.

This duration of human souls is only potentially infinite; for their eternity consists only in an endless capacity of continuance without ever ceasing to be in a boundless futurity, that can never be exhausted, or all of it be past or present; but their duration can never be positively and actually eternal, because it is most manifest, that no moment can ever be assigned, wherein it shall be true, that such a soul hath then actually sustained an infinite duration.

2. In efficacy; not in actuality.

They should tell us, whether only that be taken out of scripture which is actually and particularly there set down, or else that also which the general principles and rules of scripture potentially contain.

Blackness is produced upon the blade of a knife that has cut four apples, if the juice, though both actually and potentially cold, be not quickly wiped off.

POTENTLY. adv. [from potent.] Powerfully; forcibly.

You're potentially oppos'd; and with a malice Of as great size.

Metals are hardened by often heating and quenching; for cold worketh most potently upon heat precedent.

with; also ill formed or scrawling letters or characters.

POTION. n. f. [potio, Fr. potio, Lat.] A draught; commonly a physical draught.
For tastes in the taking of a potion or pills, the head and neck shake. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
The earl was by nature of so indifferent a taste, that he would stop in the midst of any physical potion, and after he had licked his lips, would drink off the rest. Wotton.
Most do taste through fond intemperate thirst,
Soon as the potion works, their human countenance,
Th' express resemblance of the gods, is chang'd
Into some brutish form of wolf or bear. Milton.

POTLID. n. f. [pot and lid.] The cover of a pot.
The columella is a fine, thin, light, bony tube; the bottom of which spreads about, and gives it the resemblance of a wooden potlid in country houses. Derham.

POTSHERD. n. f. [pot and shard; from schærde; properly pot-sherd.] A fragment of a broken pot.
At this day at Gaza, they couch *potsherd*s or vessels of earth in their walls to gather the wind from the top, and pass it in spouts into rooms. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
He on the ashes sits, his fate deploras;
And with a potsherd scrapes the swelling fores.
Whence come broken *potsherd*s tumbling down,
And leaky ware from garret windows thrown;
Well may they break our heads. Dryden.

wine, and brought him to an inn. Luke x. 34.

Your fury then boil'd upward to a foam;
But since this message came, you sink and settle,
As if cold water had been pour'd upon you. Dryden.

2. To emit; to give vent to; to send forth; to let out; to send in a continued course.
He thence hither,
That I may pour my spirits in thine ear,
And chaffie with the valour of my tongue
All that impedes thee from the golden round. Shaksp.
London doth pour out her citizens;
The mayor and all his brethren in best fort,
With the plebeians swarming. Shaksp. Henry V.
As thick as hail
Came post on post; and every one did bear
Thy praises in his kingdom's great defence,
And pour'd them down before him. Shaksp. Macbeth.
The devotion of the heart is the tongue of the soul; actuated and heated with love, it pours itself forth in supplications and prayers. Duppa's Rules for Devotion.
If we had groats or pence current by law, that wanted one third of the silver by the standard, who can imagine, that our neighbours would not pour in quantities of such money upon us, to the great loss of the kingdom. Locke.

The calf which they had made, he burnt in the fire, and ground it to powder. Ex. xxxii. 20.
2. Gunpowder.
The feditious being furnished with artillery, powder and shot, battered Bishopsate. Hayward.
As to the taking of a town, there were few conquerors could signalize themselves that way, before the invention of powder and fortifications. Addison.

3. Sweet dust for the hair.
When th' hair is sweet through pride or lust,
The powder doth forget the dust. Herbert.
Our humbler province is to tend the fair,
To save the powder from too rude a gale. Pope.

TO POWDER. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To reduce to dust; to comminute; to pound small.
2. To sprinkle

POW

2. [Powder, Fr.] To sprinkle, as with dust.
Powder thy radiant hair,
Which if without such ashes thou would'st wear,
Thou who, to all which come to look upon,
Wert meant for Phœbus, would'st be Phaeton. Donne.
In the galaxy, that milky way
Which nightly, as a circling zone, thou see'st
Powder'd with stars. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii.
The powder'd footman
Beneath his flapping hat secures his hair. Gay.
3. To salt; to sprinkle with salt.
If you imbowl me to day, I'll give you leave to powder me and eat me to-morrow. Shakep. Henry IV.
Salting of oysters, and powdering of meat, keepeth them from putrefaction. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
My hair I never powder, but my chief Invention is to get me powder'd beef. Cleveland.
Immoderate feeding upon powdered beef, pickled meats, anchovy, and debauching with brandy do inflame and acuate
the blood. Harvey on Consumptions.
To POWDER. v. n. To come tumultuously and violently. A low corrupt word.
Whilst two companions were disputing it at sword's point, down comes a kite powdering upon them, and gobbets up both. L'Estrange.
POWDERBOX. n. f. [powder and box.] A box in which powder for the hair is kept.
There stands the toilette,
The patch, the powderbox, pulvris, perfumes. Gay.
POWDERHORN. n. f. [powder and horn.] A horn case in which powder is kept for guns.
You may stick your candle in a bottle or a powderhorn. Stu.
POWDERMILL. n. f. [powder and mill.] The mill in which the ingredients for gunpowder are ground and mingled.
Upon the blowing up of a powdermill, the windows of adjacent houses are bent and blown outwards, by the elastic force of the air within exerting itself. Arbutnot.
POWDER-ROOM. n. f. [powder and room.] The part of a ship in which the gunpowder is kept.
The flame invades the powderrooms, and then
Their guns shoot bullets, and their vessels men. Waller.
POWDER-CHESTS. n. f. On board a ship, wooden triangular chests filled with gunpowder, pebble-stones and such like materials, set on fire when a ship is boarded by an enemy, which soon makes all clear before them. Dick.
POWDERING-TUB. n. f. [powder and tub.]
1. The vessel in which meat is salted.
When we view those large bodies of oxen, what can we better conceit them to be, than so many living and walking powdering-tubs, and that they have animam falis. More.
2. The place in which an infected lecher is physicked to preserve him from putrefaction.
To the spital go,
And from the powdering-tub of infamy Fetch forth the lazar kite Doll Tearheart. Shakep.
POWDERY. adj. [powdrex, Fr. from powder.] Dusty; friable.
A brown powdery spar, which holds iron, is found amongst the iron ore. Woodward on Fossils.
POWDER. n. f. [pouvoir, Fr.]
1. Command; authority; dominion; influence.
If law, authority and pow'r deny not,
It will go hard with poor Anthonio. Shakep.
No man could ever have a just power over the life of another, by right of property in land. Locke.
Power is no blessing in itself, but when it is employ'd to protect the innocent. Swift.
2. Influence; prevalence upon.
This man had power with him, to draw him forth to his death. Bacon's Essays.
Dejected I no, it never shall be said,
That fate had power upon a Spartan soul;
My mind on its own centre stands unmov'd
And stable, as the fabric of the world. Dryden.
3. Ability; force; reach.
That which moveth God to work is goodness, and that which ordereth his work is wisdom, and that which perfecteth his work is power. Hooker.
I have suffer'd in your woe;
Nor shall be wanting ought within my pow'r,
For your relief in my refreshing bow'r. Dryden.
You are still living to enjoy the blessings of all the good you have performed, and many prayers that your power of doing generous actions may be as extended as your will. Dry.
It is not in the power of the most enlarged understanding, to invent one new simple idea in the mind, not taken in by the ways aforementioned. Locke.
'Tis not in the power of want or slavery to make them miserable. Addison's Guardian.
Though it be not in our power to make affliction no afflic-tion; yet it is in our power to take off the edge of it, by a steady view of those divine joys prepared for us in another state. Atterbury's Sermons.

4. Strength; motive force.
Observing in ourselves, that we can at pleasure move several parts of our bodies, which were at rest; the effects also that natural bodies are able to produce in one another, occurring every moment to our senses, we both these ways get the idea of power. Locke.
5. The moving force of an engine.
By understanding the true difference betwixt the weight and the power, a man may add such a fitting supplement to the strength of the power, that it shall move any conceivable weight, though it should never so much exceed that force, which the power is naturally endowed with. Wilkins.
6. Animal strength; natural strength.
Care, not fear; or fear not for themselves altered something the countenances of the two lovers: but so as any man might perceive, was rather an assembling of powers than difmayedness of courage. Stings, b. i.
He died of great years, but of strong health and power.
Bacon's Henry VII.
7. Faculty of the mind.
If ever
You meet in some fresh cheek the power of fancy,
Then you shall know the wounds invisible,
That love's keen arrows make. Shakep.
I was in the thought, they were not fairies, and yet the guiltness of my mind, the sudden surprize of my power drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief. Shakep.
In our little world, this soul of ours
Being only one, and to one body ty'd,
Doth use, on divers objects, divers powers;
And so are her effects diversify'd. Davies.
Maintain the empire of the mind over the body, and keep the appetites of the one in due subjection to the reasoning power of the other. Atterbury's Sermons.
The design of this science is to rescue our reasoning power from their unhappy slavery and darkness. Watts.
8. Government; right of governing.
My labour
Honest and lawful, to deliver my food
Of thee who have me in their civil power. Milton.
9. Sovereign; potentate.
'Tis surprising to consider with what heats these two powers have contested their title to the kingdom of Cyprus, that is in the hands of the Turk. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
10. One invested with dominion.
After the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken. Mat.
The fables turn'd some men to flow'rs;
And others did with brutish forms invest;
And did of others make celestial pow'rs;
Like angels, which still travel, yet still rest. Davies.
If there's a pow'r above us,
And that there is all nature cries aloud
Through all her works, he must delight in virtue. Addis.
11. Divinity.
Merciful powers!
Refrain in me the cur'd thoughts, that nature
Gives way to in repose. Shakep. Macbeth.
Call down thyself, and only strive to raise
The glory of thy maker's sacred name;
Use all thy pow'rs, that blest pow'r to praise,
Which gives thee pow'r to be and use the same. Davies.
With indignation, thus he broke
His awful silence, and the pow'rs bespoke. Dryden.
Tell me,
What are the gods the better for this gold?
The wretch that offers from his wealthy store
These presents, bribes the pow'rs to give him more. Dryd.
12. Host; army; military force.
He, to work him the more mischief, sent over his brother Edward with a power of Scots and Redshanks into Ireland, where they got footing. Spenjer's State of Ireland.
Never such a power,
For any foreign preparation,
Was levied in the body of a land. Shakep. K. John.
Young Octavius and Mark Antony
Come down upon us with a mighty power,
Bending their expedition tow'rd Philippi. Shakep.
Who leads his power?
Under whose government come they along? Shakep.
My heart, dear Harry,
Threw many a northward look, to see his father
Bring up his pow'rs; but he did long in vain. Shakep.
Gazellus, upon the coming of the bassa, valiantly forth with all his power, and gave him battle. Kneller.
13. A large quantity; a great number. In low language: as a power of good things.
POWDERABLE. adj. [from power.] Capable of performing any thing.
That you may see how powerable time is in altering tongues,
I will set down the Lord's prayer as it was translated in sundry ages. Camden.
POWERFUL.

- PO'WERFUL*. adj. [power and ful.]
1. Invested with command or authority; potent.
2. Forcible; mighty.
We have sustain'd one day in doubtful fight,
What heaven's lord hath powerfully to send Against us from about his throne. Milton's Par. Lost.
Henry II. endeavouring to establish his grandfather's laws;
met with powerful opposition from archbishop Becket. Ayliffe.
3. Efficacious.
PO'WERFULLY. adv. [from powerful.] Potently; mightily;
efficaciously; forcibly.
The fun and other powerfully lucid bodies dazzle our eyes. Boyle.
By assuming a privilege belonging to riper years, to which a child must not aspire, you do but add new force to your example, and recommend the action more powerfully. Locke.
Before the revelation of the gospel, the wickedness and impunity of the heathen world was a much more excu-sable thing, because they had but very obscure apprehensions of those things which urge men most powerfully to forsake their sins. Tillotson's Sermons.
The grain-gold, upon all the golden coast of Guinea, is displayed by the rains falling there with incredible force, powerfully beating off the earth. Woodward.
PO'WERFULNESS. n. f. [from powerful.] Power; efficacy; might.
So much he stands upon the powerfulness of christian religion, that he makes it beyond all the rules of moral philosophy, strongly effectual to expel vice, and plant in men all kind of virtue. Hakewill on Providence.
PO'WERLESS. adj. [from power.] Weak; impotent.
I give you welcome with a powerless hand,
But with a heart full of unstained love. Shakep.
POX. n. f. [properly pock, which originally signified a small bag or puffle; of the same original, perhaps, with poke or poach. We still use pock, for a single puffle; pockay, Sax. pocken, Dutch.]
1. Pustules; efflorescences; exanthematous eruptions.
2. The venereal disease. This is the sense when it has no epithet.
Though brought to their ends by some other apparent disease, yet the pox hath been judged the foundation. Wifeman.
Wilt thou still sparkle in the box,
Still ogle in the ring?
Can't thou forget thy age and pox. Dorset.
POY. n. f. [appoy, Spanish; appoy, poids, Fr.] A ropedancer's pole.
To POZE. v. a. To puzzle. See POSE and APOSE.
And say you so? then I shall poze you quickly. Shakep.
Of human infirmities I shall give instances, not that I design to poze them with those common enigmas of magnetism, fluxes and refluxes. Glennville's Scorp.
PRACTICABLE. adj. [practicable, Fr.]
1. Performable; feasible; capable to be practised.
This falls out for want of examining what is practicable and what not, and for want again of measuring our force and capacity with our design. L'Estrange.
An herick poem should be more like a glass of nature, figuring a more practicable virtue to us, than was done by the ancients. Dryden on Heroick Plays.
This is a practicable degree of christian magnanimity. Att.
Some physicians have thought, that if it were practicable to keep the humours of the body in an exact balance of each with its opposite, it might be immortal; but this is impossible in the practice. Swift.
2. Assailable; fit to be assailed.
PRACTICABLENESS. n. f. [from practicable.] Possibility to be performed.
PRACTICABLY. adv. [from practicable.] In such a manner as may be performed.
The meanest capacity, when he sees a rule practicably applied before his eyes, can no longer be at a loss how 'tis to be performed. Rogers.
PRACTICAL. adj. [practicus, Lat. pratique, Fr. from practice.]
Relating to action; not merely speculative.
The image of God was no less resplendent in man's practical understanding; namely, that storehouse of the soul, in which are treasured up the rules of action and the seeds of morality. South's Sermons.
Religion comprehends the knowledge of its principles, and a suitable life and practice; the first, being speculative, may be called knowledge; and the latter, because 'tis practical, wisdom. Tillotson's Sermons.
PRACTICALLY. adv. [from practical.]
1. In relation to action.
2. By practice; in real fact.
I honour her, having practically found her among the better sort of trees. Howel's Vocal Portf.
PRACTICALNESS. n. f. [from practical.] The quality of being practical.
PRACTICE. n. f. [πραξις; pratique, Fr.]
1. The habit of doing any thing.

PRA

2. Use; customary use.
Obsolete words may be laudably revived, when they are more founding, or more significant than those in practice. Dry.
Of such a practice when Ulysses told;
Shall we, cries one, permit
This lewd romancer and his bant'ring wit. Tate.
3. Dexterity acquired by habit.
I'll prove it on his body, if he dare,
Despite his nice fence and his active practice. Shakep.
4. Actual performance, distinguished from theory.
There are two functions of the soul, contemplation and practice, according to that general division of objects, some of which only entertain our speculations, others also employ our actions; so the understanding, with relation to these, is divided into speculative and practical. South.
5. Method or art of doing any thing.
6. Medical treatment of diseases.
This disease is beyond my practice; yet I have known those which have walked in their sleep, who have died holily in their beds. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
7. Exercise of any profession.
8. [Præ, Saxon, is cunning, slyness, and thence præ, in Dau-glast, is a trick or fraud; latter times forgetting the original of words, applied to practice the sense of præ.] Wicked strata-gem; bad artifice. A sense not now in use.
He fought to have that by practice, which he could not by prayer; and being allowed to visit us, he used the opportunity of a fit time thus to deliver us. Sidney, b. ii.
Partly with suspicion of practice, the king was suddenly turned. Sidney, b. ii.
It is the shameful work of Hubert's hand,
The practice and the purpose of the king. Shakep.
Shall we thus permit
A blasting and a scandalous breath to fall
On him so near us? this needs must be practice;
Who knew of your intent and coming hither? Shakep.
Wife states prevent purposes
Before they come to practice, and foul practices
Before they grow to act. Denham's Sophy.
PRACTICK. adj. [πραξις; practicus, Lat. pratique, Fr.]
1. Relating to action; not merely theoretical.
When he speaks,
The air, a charter'd libertine, is still;
And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,
To steal his sweet and honied sentences;
So that the act and practicke part of life
Must be the mistress to this theoretick. Shakep.
Whilst they contend for speculative truth, they, by mutual calumnies, forfeit the practicke. Gov. of the Tongue.
True piety without edification rest
By theories, the practicke part is lost. Denham.
2. In Spenjer it seems to signify, sly; artful.
She used hath the practicke pain
Of this false footman, cloaked with simperness. F. Queen.
Thereto his subtle engines he doth bend,
His practicke wit, and his fair filed tongue,
With thousand other sleights. Fairy Queen.
To PRACTISE. v. a. [πραξις; pratique, Fr.]
1. To do habitually.
Incline not my heart to practise wicked works with men that work iniquity. Psalms cxli. 4.
2. To do; not merely to profess: as, to practise law or physick.
3. To use in order to habit and dexterity.
To PRACTISE. v. n.
1. To have a habit of acting in any manner formed.
Will truth return unto them that practise in her. Eclus.
They shall practise how to live secure. Milton.
Oft have we wonder'd
How such a ruling spirit you could restrain,
And practise first over yourself to reign. Waller.
2. To transact; to negotiate secretly.
I've practis'd with him,
And found a means to let the victor know,
That Syphax and Sempromis are his friends. Addison.
3. To try artifices.
Others by guilty artifice and arts,
Of promis'd kindness practise on our hearts;
With expectation blow the passion up,
She fans the fire without one gale of hope. Granvil.
4. To use bad arts or stratagems.
If you there
Did practise on my state, your being in Egypt Might be my question. Shakep. Ant. and Cleop.
If thou do'st him any slight disgrace, he will practise against thee by poison. Shakespeare's As You Like it.
5. To use medical methods.
I never thought I should try a new experiment, being little inclined to practise upon others, and as little that others should practise upon me. Temple's Miscel.
6. To exercise any profession.
PRACTISANT. n. f. [from practise.] An agent.
Here enter'd Pucelle and her practisants. Shakep.
20 E. PRACTISER.

PRA

PRACTISER. n. f. [from practise.]
1. One that practises any thing; one that does any thing habitually.

We will, in the principles of the politician, shew how little efficacy they have to advance the practiser of them to the things they aspire to. South's Sermons.

2. One who prescribes medical treatment.
Sweet practiser, thy physick I will try,
That ministers thine own death if I die. Shakespeare.
I had reasoned myself into an opinion, that the use of physicians, unless in some acute disease, was a great venture, and that their greatest practisers practised least upon themselves. Temple.

PRACTITIONER. n. f. [from practise.]
1. He who is engaged in the actual exercise of any art.
The author exhorts all gentlemen practitioners to exercise themselves in the translatory. Arbutnot.
I do not know a more universal and unnecessary mistake among the clergy, but especially the younger practitioners. Sw.

2. One who uses any fly or dangerous arts.
There is some papistical practitioners among you. Whitgift.

3. One who does any thing habitually.
He must be first an exercised, thorough-paced practitioner of these vices himself. South's Sermons.

PRÆCOGNITA. n. f. [Latin.] Things previously known in order to understanding something else; thus the structure of the human body is one of the præcognita of physick.
Either all knowledge does not depend on certain præcognita or general maxims, called principles, or else these are principles. Locke.

PRAGMATICK. adj. [πραγματικη; pragmaticque, Fr.]
PRAGMATICAL. adj. Meddling; impertinently busy; assuming business without leave or invitation.
No man so gross, but it will pass upon a weak man that is pragmatical and inquisitive. L'Estrange.

Common estimation puts an ill character upon pragmatick meddling people.
He understands no more of his own affairs, than a child; he has got a sort of a pragmatical filly jade of a wife, that pretends to take him out of my hands. Arbutnot.

The fellow grew to pragmatical, that he took upon him the government of my whole family. Arbutnot.

Such a backwardness there was among good men to engage with an usurping people, and pragmatical ambitious orators. Swift.

They are pragmatical enough to stand on the watch tower, but who assigned them the post? Swift.

PRAGMATICALLY. adv. [from pragmatical.] Meddlingly; impertinently.

PRAGMATICALNESS. n. f. [from pragmatical.] The quality of intermeddling without right or call.

PRAISE. n. f. [παις, Dutch.]
1. Renown; commendation; fame; honour; celebrity.
Best of fruits, whose taste has taught
The tongue, not made for speech, to speak thy praise. Milt.
Lucan, content with praise, may lie at ease
In costly grots and marble palaces;
But to poor Bassus what avails a name,
To flatter on compliments and empty fame. Dryden.

2. Glorification; tribute of gratitude; laud.
He hath put a new song in my mouth, even praise unto our God. Psalms xl. 3. Milton.

To God glory and praise.

3. Ground or reason of praise.
Praiseworthy actions are by thee embrac'd;
And 'tis my praise to make thy praises last. Dryden.

To PRAISE. v. a. [praisien, Dutch.]
1. To commend; to applaud; to celebrate.
Will God incense his ire
For such a petty trespass, and not praise
Rather your dauntless virtue. Milton.

We praise not Hector, though his name we know
Is great in arms; 'tis hard to praise a foe. Dryden.

2. To glorify in worship.
The shepherds returned, glorifying and praising God for all the things that they had heard and seen. Luke ii. 20.

One generation shall praise thy works to another, and declare thy mighty works. Psalms cxlv. 4.

Their touch'd their golden harps, and hymning praise'd
God and his works. Milton.

PRAISEFUL. adj. [praise and full.] Laudable; commendable. Not now in use.
Of whose high praise, and praiseful bliss,
Goodness the pen, heaven the paper is.
He ordain'd a lady for his prize,
Generally praiseful, fair and young, and skill'd in housewiferies. Chapman's Iliad.

PRAISER. n. f. [from praise.] One who praises; an applauder; a commender.

We men and praisers of men should remember, that if we have such excellencies, it is reason to think them excellent creatures, of whom we are. Sidney.

PRA

Forgive me, if my verse but say you are A Sidney; but in that extend as far As lowliest praises. B. Johnson's Epig.

Turn to God, who knows I think this true,
And useth oft, when such a heart mislays,
To make it good; for such a praiser prays. Dante.

PRAISEWORTHY. adj. [praise and worthy.] Commendable; deserving praise.

The Tritonian goddess having heard
Her blazed fame, which all the world had fill'd, Came down to prove the truth, and due reward
For her praiseworthy workmanship to yield. Spenser.

Since men have left to do praiseworthy things,
Most think all praises flatteries; but truth brings
That found, and that authority with her name,
As to be rais'd by her is only fame. Ben. Johnson.

Firmus, who seized upon Egypt, was so far praiseworthy, that he encouraged trade. Arbutnot on Com.

PRANCE. n. f. A flat bottomed boat.
To PRANCE. v. a. [pranken, Dutch, to set one's self to show.]
1. To spring and bound in high mettle.
Here's no fantastick mask, nor dance,
But of our kids that frisk and prance;
Nor wars are seen,
Unless upon the green,
Two harmless lambs are butting one the other. Wotton.

With mud fill'd high, the rumbling cart draws near,
Now rule thy prancing steeds, lac'd charioteer. Gey.

Far be the spirit of the chase from them,
To spring the fence, to rein the prancing steed. Thomson.

2. To ride gallantly and ostentatiously.
The horses hoofs were broken by means of the prancings, the prancings of their mighty ones. Judges v. 22.

Th' insulting tyrant, prancing o'er the field,
Strow'd with Rome's citizens, and drench'd in slaughter,
His horses hoofs wet with patrician blood. Addison.

3. To move in a warlike or showy manner.
We should neither have meat to eat, nor manufacture to cloathe us, unless we could prance about in coats of mail, or eat brass. Swift.

To PRANK. v. a. [pranken, Dutch.] To decorate; to dress or adjust to ostentation.

Some prank their ruffs, and others timely dight
Their gay attire. Fairy Queen.

In wine and meats the flow'd above the bank,
And in excess exceeded her own night,
In sumptuous tire she joy'd herself to prank,
But of her love too lavish. Fairy Queen.

These are tribunes of the people,
The tongues o' th' common mouth: I despise them:
For they do prank them in authority
Against all noble succurance. Shakespeare.

Your high self,
The gracious mark o' th' land, you have obscur'd
With a swain's wearing; and me, poor lowly maid, Most goddess-like prank'd up. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.

'Tis that miracle, and queen of gems,
That nature pranks, her mind attracts my soul. Shakespeare.

I had not unlock'd my lips
In this unhallowed air, but that this jugler
Would think to charm my judgment as mine eyes, Obtruding false rules, pranks in reason's garb. Milton.

PRANK. n. f. A frolic; a wild flight; a ludicrous trick; a wicked act.

Lay home to him;
Tell him, his pranks have been too broad to bear with. Shakespeare.

Such is thy audacious wickedness,
Thy lewd, pestiferous and diffident pranks;
The very infants prattle of thy pride. Shakespeare.

They caused the table to be covered and meat set on, which was no sooner set down, than in came the harpies, and played their accustomed pranks. Raleigh.

They put on their cloaths, and played all those pranks you have taken notice of. Addison's Guardian.

PRAISE. n. f. [πρᾶσις.] A leek: also a sea weed as green as a leek. Bailey.

To PRATE. v. n. [praten, Dutch.] To talk carelessly and without weight; to chatter; to tattle; to be loquacious; to prattle.

His knowledge or skill is in prating too much. Tusser.

Behold me, which owe
A moiety of the throne, here standing
To prate and talk for life and honour, 'fore
Who please to hear. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.

This starved justice hath prated to me of the wildness of his youth, and the feats he hath done about Turnbal-street, and every third word a lie. Shakespeare. Henry IV. p. ii.

After Flammock and the blacksmith had, by joint and several pratings, found tokens of consent in the multitude, they offered themselves to lead them. Bacon's Henry VII.

Oh listen with attentive light
To what my prating eyes induce! Clarendon.

PRA

What nonsense would the fool thy master prate,
When thou, his knave, can't talk at such a rate. Dryden.

She first did wit's prerogative remove,
And made a fool presume to prate of love. Dryden.

This is the way of the world; the deaf will prate of discords in music. Watts.

PRATE. n. f. [from the verb.] Tattle; slight talk; unmeaning loquacity.

If I talk to him; with his innocent prate,
He will awake my mercy which lies dead. Shakespeare.

Would her innocent prate could overcome me;
Oh! what a conflict do I feel. Denham's Sephy.

PRATER. n. f. [from prate.] An idle talker; a chatterer.
When expectation rages in my blood,
Is this a time, thou prater; hence be gone. Southern.

PRATINGLY. adv. [from prate.] With tittle tattle; with loquacity.

PRATTIQUE. n. f. [French; prattica, Italian.] A licence for the master of a ship to traffick in the ports of Italy upon a certificate, that the place, from whence he came, is not annoyed with any infectious disease. Bailey.

To PRATTLE. v. n. [diminutive of prate.] To talk lightly; to chatter; to be trivially loquacious.

But I prattle
Something too wildly, and my father's precepts
I therein do forget. Shakespeare's Tempest.

What the great ones do, the less will prattle of. Shakespeare.

A French woman teaches an English girl to speak and read French, by only prattling to her. Locke.

There is not too much pleasure to have a child prattle agreeably, as to reason well. Locke on Education.

His tongue, his prattling tongue, had chang'd him quite
To footy blackness, from the purest white. Ad. Ovid.

A little lively rustick, trained up in ignorance and prejudice, will prattle treason a whole evening. Addison.

I must prattle on,
And beg your pardon, yet this half hour.
Let credulous boys and prattling nurses tell,
How if the festival of Paul be clear,
Plenty from lib'ral horn shall flow the year. Gay.

PRATTLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Empty talk; trifling loquacity.

In a theatre the eyes of men,
After a well-grac'd actor leaves the stage,
Are idly bent on him that enters next,
Thinking his prattle to be tedious. Shakespeare. Rich. II.

Wherein the topped consuls can propose
As masterly as he; mere prattle, without practice,
Is all his soldierish. Shakespeare. Othello.

The insignificant prattle and endless garrulity of the philosophy of the schools. Glover.

PRATTIER. n. f. [from prattle.] A trifling talker; a chatterer.
Poor prattler! how thou talk'st?
Prattler, no more, I say;
My thoughts must work, but like a noiseless sphere,
Harmonious peace must rock them all the day;
No room for prattlers there. Herbert.

PRAVITY. n. f. [pravitas, Lat.] Corruption; badness; malignity.

Doubt not but that sin
Will reign among them, as of thee begot;
And therefore was law given them, to evince
Their natural pravity. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.

More people go to the gibbet for want of timely correction, than upon any incurable pravity of nature. L'Estrange.

I will shew how the pravity of the will could influence the understanding to a disbelief of Christianity. South.

PRAWN. n. f. A small crustaceous fish, like a shrimp, but larger.
I had prawns, and borrowed a morsel of vinegar. Shakespeare.

To PRAY. v. n. [prayer, Fr. pregare, Italian.]
1. To make petitions to heaven.
I will buy with you, sell will you; but I will not eat with you, drink with you, nor pray with you. Shakespeare.

Pray for this good man and his issue.
Ne'er throughout the year to church thou go'st,
Except it be to pray against thy foes. Shakespeare.

I tell him, we shall stay here at the least a month; and he heartily prays, some occasion may detain us longer. Shakespeare.

Is any sick? let him call for the elders of the church, and let them pray over him. Jam. v. 14.

Unskillful with what words to pray, let me Interpret for him. Milton.

He that prays, despairs not; but sad is the condition of him that cannot pray; happy are they that can, and do, and love to do it. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

Thou, Turnus, shalt atone it by thy fate,
And pray to heav'n for peace, but pray too late. Dryden.

He prais'd my courage, pray'd for my success;
He was so true a father of his country,
To thank me for defending ev'n his foes. Dryden.

PRE

Should you pray to God for a recovery, how rash would it be to accuse God of not hearing your prayers, because you found your disease still to continue. Wake.

2. To entreat; to ask submissively.
You shall find
A conqueror that will pray in aid for kindness,
Where he for grace is kneel'd to. Shakespeare.

Pray that in towns and temples of renown,
The name of great Anchises may be known. Dryden.

3. I PRAY; that is, I pray you to tell me is a slightly ceremonious form of introducing a question.
But I pray, in this mechanical formation, when the ferment was expanded to the extremities of the arteries, why did it not break through the receptacle? Bentley's Sermons.

4. Sometimes only pray elliptically.
Barnard in spirit, sense and truth abounds;
Pray then what wants he? fourscore thousand pounds. Pope.

To PRAY. v. a.
1. To supplicate; to implore; to address with submissive petitions.

How much more, if we pray him, will his ear
Be open, and his heart to pity incline? Milton.

2. To ask for as a supplicant.
He that will have the benefit of this act, must pray a prohibition before a sentence in the ecclesiastical court. Ashe.

3. To entreat in ceremony or form.
Pray my colleague Antonius I may speak with him;
And as you go, call on my brother Quintus,
And pray him with the tribunes to come to me. B. Johnson.

PRAYER. n. f. [prayer, Fr.]
1. Petition to heaven.
They did say their prayers, and address'd them Again to sleep. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

O remember, God!
O hear her prayer for them as now for us. Shakespeare.

Were he as famous and as bold in war,
As he is fam'd for mildness, peace and prayer. Shakespeare.

My heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved. Romans x. 1.

Sighs now breath'd Inutterable, which the spirit of prayer Milton.

No man can always have the same spiritual pleasure in his prayers; for the greatest saints have sometimes suffered the banishment of the heart, sometimes are fervent, sometimes they feel a barrenness of devotion; for this spirit comes and goes. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

2. Entreaty; submissive importunity.
Prayer among men is supposed a means to change the person to whom we pray; but prayer to God doth not change him, but fits us to receive the things prayed for. Stillfleet.

PRAYERBOOK. n. f. [prayer and book.] Book of publick or private devotions.

Get a prayerbook in your hand,
And stand between two churchmen;
For on that ground I'll build a holy descent. Shakespeare.

I know not the names or number of the family which now reigns, farther than the prayerbook informs me. Swift.

PRE. [præ, Lat.] A particle which, prefixed to words derived from the Latin, marks priority of time or rank.

To PREACH. v. n. [predicare, Lat. prescher, Fr.] To pronounce a publick discourse upon sacred subjects.

From that time Jesus began to preach. Mat. iv. 17.

Prophets preach of thee at Jerusalem. Neb. vi. 7.

Divinity would not pass the yard and loom, the forge or anvil, nor preaching be taken in as an easier supplementary trade, by those that disliked the pains of their own. D. of Pie.

As he was sent by his father, so were the apostles commissioned by him to preach to the gentile world. D. of Pity.

The shape of our cathedral is not proper for our preaching auditories, but rather the figure of an amphitheatre with galleries. Graunt.

To PREACH. v. a.
1. To proclaim or publish in religious orations.
The Jews of Thessalonica had knowledge, that the word of God was preach'd of Paul. Acts.

2. To inculcate publicly; to teach with earnestness.
There is not any thing publicly notified, but we may properly say it is preach'd. Hooker.

He oft to them preach'd
Conversion and repentance. Milton.

Can they preach up equality of birth,
And tell us how we all began from earth. Dryden.

Huge heaps of slain;
Among the rest, the rich Galeus lies,
A good old man while peace he preach'd in vain,
Amidst the madness of th' unruly train. Dryden.

PREACH. n. f. [presche, Fr. from the verb.] A discourse; a religious oration.

This oversight occasioned the French spitefully to term religion in that sort exercised, a mere preach. Hooker.

4 PREACHER.

PRE

PREACHER, n. f. [præcheur, Fr. from preach.]
1. One who discourses publicly upon religious subjects.
The Lord gave the word; great was the company of the preachers. Palm lxxviii. 11.
You may hear the found of a preacher's voice, when you cannot distinguish what he saith. Bacon.

Here lies a truly honest man,
One of those few that in this town Honour all preachers; hear their own. Crashaw.

2. One who inculcates any thing with earnestness and vehemence.

No preacher is listened to but time, which gives us the same train of thought, that elder people have tried in vain to put into our heads before. Swift.

PREACHMENT, n. f. [from preach.] A sermon mentioned in contempt; a discourse affectedly solemn.

Was't you, that revell'd in our parliament,
And made a preachment of your high descent.
All this is but a preachment upon the text at last. Shakefp. L'Esrange.

PREAMBLE, n. f. [præambule, Fr.] Something previous; introduction; preface.

How were it possible that the church should any way else with such ease and certainty provide, that none of her children may, as Adam, dissemble that wretchedness, the penitent confession whereof is so necessary a preamble, especially to common prayer. Hooker, b. v.

Truth as in this we do not violate, so neither is the same gainfayed or crossed, no not in those very preambles placed before certain readings, wherein the steps of the Latin service book have been somewhat too nearly followed. Hooker.

Doors shut, visits forbidden, and divers contestations with the queen, all preambles of ruin, though now and then he did wring out some petty contentments. Watson.

This preamble to that history was not improper for this relation. Clarendon's Hist. of the Rebellion.

With preamble sweet
Of charming symphony they introduce
Their sacred songs, and waken raptures high. Milton.

I will not detain you with a long preamble. Dryden.

PREAMBULATORY, adj. [from preamble.] Previous. Not in PREAMBULOUS. u. f.

He not only undermineth the base of religion, but destroyeth the principle preambulous unto all belief, and puts upon us the remotest error from truth. Brown.

PREAPPREHENSION, n. f. [pre and apprehend.] An opinion formed before examination.

A conceit not to be made out by ordinary eyes, but such as regarding the clouds, behold them in shapes conformable to preapprehensions. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PREASE, n. f. Preas; crowd. Spenser. See PREASS.
A ship into the sacred seas.

New-built, now launch we; and from out our prease
Chuse two and fifty youths. Chapman.

PREASING, part. adj. Crowding. Spenser.

PREBEND, n. f. [præbenda, low Latin; prebende, Fr.]
1. A stipend granted in cathedral churches.

His excellency gave the doctor a prebend in St. Patrick's cathedral. Swift's Miscellanies.

2. Sometimes, but improperly, a stipendiary of a cathedral; a prebendary.

Deans and canons, or prebends of cathedral churches, in their first institution, were of great use, to be of counsel with the bishop. Bacon.

PREBENDARY, n. f. [præbendarius, Lat.] A stipendiary of a cathedral.

To lords, to principals, to prebendaries. Hubberd.
I bequeath to the Reverend Mr. Grattan, prebendary of St. Auden's, my gold bottle-screw. Swift's Last Will.

PRECA'RIOUS, adj. [precarious, Lat. precaire, Fr.] Dependent; uncertain, because depending on the will of another; held by courtesy; changeable or alienable at the pleasure of another. No word is more unskillfully used than this with its derivatives. It is used for uncertain in all its senses; but it only means uncertain, as dependent on others: thus there are authors who mention the precariousness of an account, of the weather, of a die.

What subjects will precarious kings regard,
A beggar speaks too softly to be heard. Dryden.

Those who live under an arbitrary tyrannick power, have no other law but the will of their prince, and consequently no privileges but what are precarious. Addison.

This little happiness is so very precarious, that it wholly depends on the will of others. Addison's Spectator.

He who rejoices in the strength and beauty of youth, should consider by how precarious a tenure he holds these advantages, that a thousand accidents may before the next dawn lay all these glories in the dust. Rogers's Sermons.

PRECA'RIOUSLY, n. f. [from precarious.] Uncertainly by dependence; dependently; at the pleasure of others.
Our scene precariously subsists too long
On French translation and Italian song.

PRE

Dare to have sense yourselves; assert the stage,
Be justly warm'd with your own native rage. Pope.

PRECA'RIOSNESS, n. f. [from precarious.] Uncertainty; dependence on others. The following passage from a book, otherwise elegantly written, affords an example of the impropriety mentioned at the word precarious.

Most consumptive people die of the discharge they spit up, which, with the precariousness of the symptoms of an oppressed diaphragm from a mere lodgement of extravasated matter, render the operation but little advisable. Sharp's Surgery.

PRECAUTION, n. f. precaution, Fr. [from precautus, Lat.] Preservative caution; preventive measures.

Unless our ministers have strong assurances of his falling in with the grand alliance, or not opposing it, they cannot be too circumspect and speedy in taking their precautions against any contrary resolution. Addison on the State of the War.

To PRECAUTION, v. a. [precautioner, Fr. from the noun.] To warn beforehand.

By the disgraces, diseases and beggary of hopeful young men brought to ruin, he may be precautioned. Lake.

PRECAUTIONOUS, adj. [This word is, I believe, mistaken by the author for praedoneous; praedoneous, Lat. cut or slain before. Nor is it used here in its proper sense.] previous; antecedent.

That priority of particles of simple matter, influx of the heavens and preparation of matter might be antecedent and praedoneous, not only in order, but in time, to their ordinary productions. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To PRECEDE, v. a. [præcedo, Lat. preceder, Fr.]
1. To go before in order of time.

How are we happy, still in fear of harm;
But harm precedes not sin. Milton.

Arius and Pelagius durst provoke,
To what the centuries preceding spoke: Dryden.

The ruin of a state is generally preceded by an universal degeneracy of manners and contempt of religion. Swift.

2. To go before according to the adjunction of rank.

PRECEDENCE, n. f. [from præcedo, Lat.]
PRECEDENCY, n. f. [from præcedo, Lat.]

1. The act or state of going before; priority.

2. Something going before; something past.

I do not like but yet; it does ally
The good precedence. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleop.

It is an epilogue or discourse, to make plain
Some obscure precedence that hath tofore been said. Shakefp.

3. Adjustment of place.

The confutable and martial had cognizance, touching the rights of place and precedence. Hale.

4. The foremost place in ceremony.

None sure will claim in hell
Precedence; none, whose portion is small
Of present pain, that with ambitious mind
Will covet more. Milton's Par. Lost.

The royal olive accompanied him with all his court, and always gave him the precedency. Howd.

That person hardly will be found,
With gracious form and equal virtue crown'd;
Yet if another could precedence claim,
My first desires could find no fairer aim. Dryden.

5. Superiority.

Books will furnish him, and give him light and precedency enough to go before a young follower. Lake.

Being distracted with different desires, the next inquiry will be, which of them has the precedency, in determining the will, to the next action. Lake.

PRECEDENT, adj. [precedens, Fr. precedens, Lat.] Former; going before.

Do it at once,
Or thy precedent services are all
But accidents unpurpos'd. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleop.

Our own precedent passions do instruct us.
What levity's in youth. Shakefp. Timon of Athens.

When you work by the imagination of another, it is necessary that he, by whom you work, have a precedent opinion of you, that you can do strange things. Bacon.

Hippocrates, in his prognosticks, doth make good observations of the diseases that ensue upon the nature of the precedent four seasons of the year. Bacon.

The world, or any part thereof, could not be precedent to the creation of man. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Truths, absolutely necessary to salvation, are so clearly revealed, that we cannot err in them, unless we be notoriously wanting to ourselves; herein the fault of the judgment is resolved into a precedent default in the will. Swift.

PRECEDENT, n. f. [The adjective has the accent on the second syllable, the substantive on the first.] Any thing that is a rule or example to future times; any thing done before of the same kind.

Examples for cases can but direct as precedents only. Hooker.

Eleven hours I've spent to write it over, Shakefp. Lear.

The precedent was full as long a doing. Shakefp. Lear.

PRE

A reason mighty, strong and effectual,
A pattern, precedent and lively warrant
For me, most wretched, to perform the like. Shakefp.

No pow'r in Venice
Can alter a decree established:
'Twill be recorded for a precedent;
And many an error, by the same example,
Will rush into the state. Shakefp. Merch. of Venice.

God, in the administration of his justice, is not tied to precedents, and we cannot argue, that the providences of God towards other nations shall be conformable to his dealings with the people of Israel. Tillotson's Sermons.

Such precedents are numberless; we draw
Our right from custom; custom is a law. Granville.

PRECEDENTLY, adv. [from precedent, adj.] Beforehand.

PRECEN'TOR, n. f. [præcentor, Lat. præcentur, Fr.] He that leads the choir.

Follow this præcentor of ours, in blessing and magnifying that God of all grace, and never yielding to those enemies, which he died to give us power to resist and overcome. Hamm.

PRECEPT, n. f. [præcepte, Fr. præceptum, Lat.] A rule authoritatively given; a mandate; a commandment; a direction.

The custom of lessons furnishes the very simplest and rudest sort with infallible axioms and precepts of sacred truth, delivered even in the very letter of the law of God. Hooker.

'Tis sufficient, that painting be acknowledged for an art; for it follows, that no arts are without their precepts. Dryden.

A precept or commandment conflicts in, and has respect to, some moral point of doctrine, viz. such as concerns our manners, and our inward and outward good behaviour. Ayliffe.

PRECEPTIAL, adj. [from precept.] Consisting of precepts. A word not in use.

Men
Can counsel, and give comfort to that grief
Which they themselves not feel; but talking it,
Their counsel turns to passion, which before
Would give preceptual medicine to rage;
Fetter strong madmen in a filken thread,
Charm ach with air, and agony with words. Shakefp.

PRECEPTIVE, adj. [præceptivus, Lat. from precept.] Containing precepts; giving precepts.

The ritual, the preceptive, the prophetic and all other parts of sacred writ, were most sedulously, most religiously guarded by them. Government of the Tongue.

As the preceptive part enjoins the most exact virtue, so is it most advantageously enforced by the promissory, which, in respect of the rewards, and the manner of proposing them, is adapted to the same end. Decay of Piety.

The lesson given us here, is preceptive to us not to do any thing but upon due consideration. L'Estrange.

PRECEPTOR, n. f. [præceptor, Lat. præceptor, Fr.] A teacher; a tutor.

Passionate chiding carries rough language with it, and the names that parents and præceptors give children, they will not be ashamed to bestow on others. Locke.

It was to thee, great Stagyrite unknown,
And thy præceptor of divine renown. Blackmore.

PRECESSION, n. f. [from præcedo, præcessus, Lat.] The act of going before.

PRECINCT, n. f. [præcinctus, Latin.] Outward limit; boundary.

The main body of the sea being one, yet within divers precincts, hath divers names; so the catholic church is in like sort divided into a number of distinct societies. Hooker.

Through all restraint broke loose, he wings his way
Not far off heav'n, in the precincts of light, Directly towards the new-created world. Milton.

PRECIOUS, n. f. [from pretiosus, Lat.]

1. Value; preciousness.

2. Any thing of high price.

The index or forefinger was too naked whereto to commit their preciosities, and hath the tuition of the thumb scarce unto the second joint. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Barbarians seem to exceed them in the curiosity of their application of these preciosities. Moré's Divine Dialogues.

PRECIOUS, adj. [pretiosus, Fr. pretiosus, Lat.]

1. Valuable; being of great worth.

Many things, which are most precious, are neglected only because the value of them lieth hid. Hooker.

I cannot but remember such things were,
That were most precious to me. Shakefp. Macbeth.

Why in that ravens left you wife and children,
Those precious motives, those strong knots of love,
Without leave taking? Shakefp. Macbeth.

I never saw
Such precious deeds in one that promis'd nought
But beggary and poor luck. Shakefp. Cymbeline.

These virtues are the hidden beauties of a soul, which make it lovely and precious in his sight, from whom no secrets are concealed. Addison's Spectator.

2. Costly; of great price: as, a precious stone.

Let none admire
That riches grow in hell; that soil may best Deserve the precious bane. Milton.

PRE

3. Worthless. An epithet of contempt or irony.
More of the same kind, concerning these precious saints amongst the Turks, may be seen in Pietro della valle. Locke.

PRECIOUSLY, adv. [from precious.]

1. Valuably; to a great price.

2. Contemptibly. In irony.

PRECIOUSNESS, n. f. [from precious.] Valuableness; worth; price.

Its preciousness equalled the price of pearls. Wilkins.

PRECIPICE, n. f. [præcipitium, Lat. precipice, Fr.] A headlong steep; a fall perpendicular without gradual declivity.

You take a precipice for no leap of danger,
And woo your own destruction. Shakefp. Henry VIII.

Where the water dasheth more against the bottom, there it moveth more swiftly and more in precipice; for in the breaking of the waves there is ever a precipice. Bacon.

I ere long that precipice must tread,
Whence none return, that leads unto the dead. Sandys.

No stupendous precipice denies Access, no horror turns away our eyes. Denham.

Swift down the precipice of time it goes,
And links in minutes, which in ages rose. Dryden.

His generous mind the fair ideas drew
Of fame and honour, which in dangers lay;
Where wealth, like fruit, on precipices grew,
Not to be gather'd but by birds of prey. Dryden.

Drink as much as you can get; because a good coachman never drives so well as when he is drunk; and then shew your skill, by driving to an inch by a precipice. Swift.

PRECIPITANCE, n. f. [from precipitant.] Rash haste; headlong hurry.

PRECIPITANCY, n. f. [from precipitant.] long hurry.

Thither they haste with glad precipitance. Milton.

'Tis not likely that one of a thousand such precipitancies should be crowned with so unexpected an issue. Glanvill.

As the chymist, by catching at it too soon, lost the philosophical elixir, so precipitancy of our understanding is an occasion of error. Glanvill's Scept.

We apply present remedies according unto indications, respecting rather the acuteness of disease and precipitancy of occasion, than the rising or letting of stars. Brown.

Hurried on by the precipitancy of youth, I took this opportunity to send a letter to the secretary. Gulliver's Travels.

A rashness and precipitance of judgment, and hastiness to believe something on one side or the other, plunges us into many errors. Watts's Logic.

PRECIPITANT, adj. [precipitans, Lat.]

1. Falling or rushing headlong.

Without longer pause,
Downright into the world's first region throws
His flight precipitant. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iii.

The birds headlong while they strain
Their tuneful throats, the towering heavy lead
O'er takes their speed; they leave their little lives
Above the clouds, precipitant to earth. Philips.

2. Hasty; urged with violent haste.

Should he return, that troop so blithe and bold,
Precipitant in fear, would wing their flight,
And curse their cumbrous pride's unwieldy weight. Pope.

3. Rashly hurried.

The commotions in Ireland were so sudden and so violent, that it was hard to discern the rise, or apply a remedy to that precipitant rebellion. King Charles.

PRECIPITANTLY, adv. [from precipitant.] In headlong haste; in a tumultuous hurry.

To PRECIPITATE, v. a. [præcipito, Lat. precipiter, Fr. in all the senses.]

1. To throw headlong.

She had a king to her son in law, yet was, upon dark and unknown reasons, precipitated and banished the world into a nunnery. Bacon's Henry VII.

Ere vengeance
Precipitate thee with augmented pain. Milton.

They were wont, upon a superstition, to precipitate a man from some high cliff into the sea, tying about him with strings many great fowls. Wilkins.

The virgin from the ground
Upstarting fresh, already clos'd the wound,
Precipitates her flight. Dryden.

The goddess guides her son, and turns him from the light, Herself involv'd in clouds, precipitates her flight. Dryden.

2. To hasten unexpectedly.

Short, intermittent and swift recurrent pains do precipitate patients into consumptions. Harvey.

3. To hurry blindly or rashly.

As for having them obnoxious to ruin, if they be of fearful natures, it may do well; but if they be stout and daring, it may precipitate their designs, and prove dangerous. Bacon.

Dear Erythræa, let not such blind fury
Precipitate your thoughts, nor let them working,
Till time shall lend them better means,
Than lost complaints. Denham's Sophy.

3. To throw

PRE

3. To throw to the bottom. A term of chymistry opposed to sublime.
Gold endures a vehement fire long without any change, and after it has been divided by corrosive liquors into invisible parts, yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear again in its own form. Grew's Cymol.

TO PRECIPITATE. v. n.

1. To fall headlong.
Had'st thou been aught but goss'mer feathers,
So many fathom down precipitating, Thou'd'st shiver like an egg. Shaksp. King Lear.
2. To fall to the bottom as a sediment.
By strong water every metal will precipitate. Bacon.
3. To hasten without just preparation.
Neither did the rebels spoil the country, neither on the other side did their forces encrease, which might hasten him to precipitate and assail them. Bacon.

PRECIPITATE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Steeply falling.
Barcephas saith, it was necessary this paradise should be set at such a height, because the four rivers, had they not fallen so precipitate, could not have had sufficient force to thrust themselves under the great ocean. Raleigh.
- When the full stores their ancient bounds disdain,
Precipitate the furious torrent flows;
In vain would speed avoid, or strength oppose. Prior.
2. Headlong; hasty; rashly hasty.
The archbishop, too precipitate in pressing the reception of that which he thought a reformation, paid dearly for it. Clarendon.
3. Hasty; violent.
Mr. Gay died of a mortification of the bowels; it was the most precipitate case I ever knew, having cut him off in three days. Pope to Swift.

PRECIPITATE. n. f. A corrosive medicine made by precipitating mercury.
As the scar separated, I rubb'd the super-excrecence of flesh with the vitriol-stone, or sprinkled it with precipitate. Wifeman's Surgery.

PRECIPITATELY. adv. [from precipitate.]

1. Headlong; steeply down.
It may happen to those who vent praise or censure too precipitately, as it did to an English poet, who celebrated a nobleman for erecting Dryden's monument, upon a promise which he forgot, till it was done by another. Swift.

2. Hastily; in blind hurry.
Not so bold Arnall; with a weight of scull Furious he sinks, precipitately dall. Pope's Dunciad.

PRECIPITATION. n. f. [precipitation, Fr. from precipitate.]

1. The act of throwing headlong.
Let them pile ten hills on the Tarpeian rock,
That the precipitation might down-thrust Below the beam of light, yet will I still Be this to them. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
2. Violent motion downward.
That could never happen from any other cause than the hurry, precipitation and rapid motion of the water, returning at the end of the deluge, towards the sea. Woodward.

3. Tumultuous hurry; blind haste.
Here is none of the hurry and precipitation, none of the blustering and violence, which must have attended those supposititious changes. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

4. In chymistry, Subsidiency: contrary to sublimation.
Separation is wrought by precipitation or sublimation; that is, a calling of the parts up or down, which is a kind of attraction. Bacon.

The precipitation of the vegetative matter, after the deluge, and the burying it in the strata underneath amongst the sand, was to retrench the luxury of the productions of the earth, which had been so ungratefully abused by its former inhabitants. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

PRECIPITOUS. adj. [precipites, Lat.]

1. Headlong; steep.
Monarchy, together with me, could not but be dashed in pieces by such a precipitous fall as they intended. K. Charles.
2. Hasty; sudden.
Though the attempts of some have been precipitous, and their enquiries so audacious as to have lost themselves in attempts above humanity, yet have the enquiries of most deflected by the way. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

How precious the time 'is, how precipitous the occasion, how many things to be done in their just season, after once a ground is in order.  Evelyn's Calendar.

3. Rash; heady.
Thus fram'd for ill, he loos'd our triple hold,
Advice unsafe, precipitous and bold. Dryden.

PRECISE. adj. [precis, Fr. precisus, Lat.]

1. Exact; strict; nice; having strict and determinate limitations.
Means more durable to preserve the laws of God from oblivion and corruption grew in use, not without precise direction from God himself. Hooker, b. i.

PRECISELY. adv. [from precise.]

1. Exactly; nicely; accurately.
Doth it follow, that all things in the church, from the greatest to the least, are unholty, which the Lord hath not himself precisely instituted? Hooker, b. v.

When the Lord had once precisely set down a form of executing that wherein we are to serve him, the fault appeareth greater to do that which we are not, than not to do that which we are commanded. Hooker, b. ii.

He cannot so precisely weed this land,
As his misdoubts present occasion,
His foes are so enrobed with his friends. Shaksp.

Where more of these orders than one shall be set in several stories, there must be an exquisite care to place the columns precisely one over another. Watson's Architecture.

In his tract my wary feet have stept,
His undeclined ways precisely kept. Sandys.

The rule, to find the age of the moon, cannot shew precisely an exact account of the moon, because of the inequality of the motions of the sun and of the moon. Haller.

Measuring the diameter of the fifth dark circle, I found it the fifth part of an inch precisely. Newton's Opticks.

2. With superfluous formality; with too much scrupulosity; with troublesome ceremony.
PRECISENESS. n. f. [from precise.] Exactness; rigid nicety.
I will distinguish the cases; though give me leave, in the handling of them, not to fever them with too much preciseness. Bacon.

When you have fixed proper hours for particular studies, keep to them, not with a superfluous preciseness, but with some good degrees of a regular constancy. Watts.

PRECISION. n. f. [from precise.] Exactness; rigid nicety.
1. One who limits or restrains.
Though love use reason for his precision, he admits him not for his counsellor. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

2. One who is superstitiously rigorous.
A profane person calls a man of piety a precision. Watts.

PRECISION. n. f. [precision, Fr.] Exact limitation.
He that thinks of being in general, thinks never of any particular species of being; unless he can think of it with and without precision at the same time. Locke.

I have left out the utmost precisions of fractions in these computations as not necessary; these whole numbers shewing well enough the difference of the value of guineas. Locke.

I was unable to treat this part more in detail, without sacrificing perspicuity to ornament, without wandering from the precision or breaking the chain of reasoning. Pope.

PRECISIVE. adj. [from precisus, Lat.] Exactly limiting; by cutting off all that is not absolutely relative to the present purpose.
Precisive abstraction is when we consider those things apart, which cannot really exist apart; as when we consider modes, without considering its substance or subject. Watts.

TO PRECLUDE. v. a. [precludo, Lat.] To shut out or hinder by some anticipation.
This much will obviate and preclude the objections of our adversaries, that we do not determine the final cause of the systematical parts of the world, merely as they have respect to the exigencies or conveniences of life. Bentley.

If you once allow them such an acceptance of chance, you have precluded yourself from any more reasoning against them. Bentley's Sermons.

I fear there will be no way left to tell you, that I entirely esteem you; none but that which no bills can preclude, and no king can prevent. Pope.

PRECOCIOUS. adj. [precocius, Lat. precisus, Fr.] Ripe before the time.
Many precocious trees, and such as have their spring in the winter, may be found in most parts. Brown.

PRE

You'll not bear a letter for me; you stand upon your honour; why, thou unconfinable balneus, it is as much as I can do to keep the term of mine honour precise. Shaksp.

The state hath given you licence to stay on land six weeks, and let it not trouble you if your occasions ask farther time, for the law in this point is not precise. Bacon.

Let us descend from this top
Of speculation; for the hour precise Exacts our parting. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xiii.

In human actions there are no degrees and precise natural limits described, but a latitude is indulged. Taylor.

The reasonings must be precise, though the practice may admit of great latitude. Abraham on Aliments.

The precise difference between a compound and collective idea is this, that a compound idea unites things of a different kind, but a collective, things of the same kind. Watts.

2. Formal; finical; solemnly and superstitiously exact.
The rallery of the wits in King Charles the Second's reign, upon every thing which they called precise, was carried to so great an extravagance, that it almost put all Christianity out of countenance. Addison.

PRECISELY. adv. [from precise.]

I fear there will be no way left to tell you, that I entirely esteem you; none but that which no bills can preclude, and no king can prevent. Pope.

PRECOCIOUS. adj. [precocius, Lat. precisus, Fr.] Ripe before the time.
Many precocious trees, and such as have their spring in the winter, may be found in most parts. Brown.

PRECOCITY. n. f. [from precocius.] Ripeness before the time.
Some impute the cause of his fall to a precocity of spirit and valour in him; and that therefore some infectious southern air did blast him. Howell's Vocal Forest.

TO PRECOGITATE. v. a. [precogito, Lat.] To consider or scheme beforehand.
PRECOGNITION. n. f. [præ and cognitio, Lat.] Previous knowledge; antecedent examination.
PRECONEIPT. n. f. [præ and conceit.] An opinion previously formed.
A thing in reason impossible, which notwithstanding through their misfashioned preconcept, appeared unto them no less certain than if nature had written it in the very foreheads of all the creatures. Bacon.

TO PRECONCEIVE. v. a. [præ and conceive.] To form an opinion beforehand; to imagine beforehand.
In a dead plain the way seemeth the longer, because the eye hath preconceived it shorter than the truth; and the frustrations of that maketh it seem so. Hooker.

Fondness of preconceived opinions is not like to render your reports suspect, nor for want of sagacity or care, defective. Glanvill's Sisyph.

The reason why men are so weak in governing is, because most things fall out accidentally, and come not into any compliance with their preconceived ends, but they are forced to comply subsequently. South's Sermons.

PRECONEPTION. n. f. [præ and conception.] Opinion previously formed.
Custom with most men prevails more than truth, according to the notions and preconceptions, which it hath formed in our minds, we shape the discourse of reason itself. Hakewill.

PRECONTRACT. n. f. [præ and contract.] This was formerly accented on the last syllable. A contract previous to another.
He is your husband on a precontract;
To bring you thus together, 'tis no sin. Shaksp.

TO PRECONTRACT. v. a. [præ and contract.] To contract or bargain beforehand.
Some are such as a man cannot make his wife, though he himself be unmarried, because they are already precontracted to some other; or else are in too near a degree of affinity or consanguinity. Ayliffe.

PRECURSE. n. f. [from præcurro, Lat.] Forerunning.
The like præcurse of fierce events,
As harbingers preceding fill the fates,
And prologue to the omen coming on,
Have heaven and earth together demonstrated. Shaksp. Tempest.

PRECURSOR. n. f. [præcursor, Lat. præcursor, Fr.] Forerunner; harbinger.
Jove's lightning, the precursor
Of dreadful thunder claps, more momentary
Were not. Shaksp. Tempest.

This contagion might have been prefiged upon consideration of its precursors, viz. a rude winter, and a close, sulphurous and fiery air. Harvey on the Plague.

Thomas Burnet played the precursor to the coming of Homer in his Homerides. Pope.

PREDACEOUS. adj. [from præda, Lat.] Living by prey.
As those are endowed with poison, because they are predaceous; so these need it not, because their food is near at hand, and may be obtained without contest. Derham.

PREDAL. adj. [from præda, Lat.] Robbing; practising plunder. This word is not countenanced from analogy.
Sarmatia, laid by præda rapine low.
Mourn'd the hard yoke, and fought relief in vain. Sa. Bosse.

PREDATORY. adj. [predatorius, Lat. from præda, Lat.] 1. Plundering; practising rapine.
The king called his parliament, where he exaggerated the malice and the cruel predatory war made by Scotland. Bacon.

2. Hungry; preying; rapacious; ravenous.
The evils that come of exercise are, that it maketh the spirits more hot and predatory. Bacon.

PREDICABLE. adj. [præ and decessed.] Dead before.
Will you mock at an ancient tradition, began upon an honourable respect, and worn as a memorable trophy of predaceous valour. Shaksp. Henry V.

PREDICATOR. n. f. [predicator, Fr. præ and decessus, Lat.] 1. One that was in any state or place before another.
In these pastoral pastimes, a great many days were spent to follow their flying predicators. Sidney.

There is cause, why we should be slow and unwilling to change, without very urgent necessity, the ancient ordinances, rites and long approved customs of our venerable predecessors. Hooker.

If I seem partial to my predecessor in the laurel, the friends of antiquity are not few. Dryden.

The present pope, who is well acquainted with the secret history, and the weakness of his predecessor, seems resolved to bring the project to its perfection. Addison.

The more beauteous Cloe sat to thee,
Good Howard, emulous of Apelles' art;
But happy thou from Cupid's arrow free,
And flames that pierc'd thy predecessor's heart. Prior.

2. Ancestors.
PREDESTINARIAN. n. f. [from predesinate.] One that holds the doctrine of predestination.
Why does the predesinarian so adventurously climb into heaven, to ransack the celestial archives, read God's hidden decrees, when with less labour he may secure an authentick transcript within himself. Decay of Piety.

TO PREDESTINATE. v. a. [predesinare, Fr. præ and desinare, Lat.] To appoint beforehand by irreversible decree.
Some gentleman or other shall scape a predesinate scratcht face. Shaksp.peare.

Whom he did foreknow, he also did predesinate to be conformed to the image of his son. Romans viii. 29.

Having predesinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself. Eph. i. 5.

TO PREDESTINATE. v. n. To hold predestination. In ludicrous language.
His ruff crest he wears,
And pricks up his predesinating ears. Dryden.

PREDESTINATION. n. f. [predesination, Fr. from predesinate.] Fatal decree; pre-ordination.
Predesination we can difference no otherwise from providence and prescience, than this, that prescience only foreseeth, providence foreseeth and careth for, and hath respect to all creatures, and predesination is only of men; and yet not of all to men belonging, but of their salvation properly in the common use of divines; or perdition, as some have used it. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

Nor can they justly accuse
Their maker, or their making, or their fate;
As if predesination over-ru'd
Their will, dispos'd by absolute decree,
Or high fore-knowledge. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iii.

PREDESTINATOR. n. f. [from predesinate.] One that holds predestination or the prevalence of pre-established necessity.
Me, mine example let the Stoicks use,
Their sad and cruel doctrine to maintain;
Let all predesinators me produce,
Who struggle with eternal fate in vain. Cowley.

TO PREDESTINE. v. a. [præ and desinare.] To decree beforehand.
Ye careful angels, whom eternal fate
Ordains on earth and human acts to wait,
Who turn with secret pow'r this restless ball,
And bid predesin'd empires rise and fall. Prior.

PREDETERMINATION. n. f. [predetermination, Fr. præ and determination.] Determination made beforehand.
This predetermination of God's own will is so far from being the determining of ours, that it is distinctly the contrary; for supposing God to predetermine that I shall act freely; 'tis certain from thence, that my will is free in respect of God, and not predetermined. Hammond's Fundamentals.

TO PREDETERMINE. v. a. [præ and determino.] To doom or confine by previous decree.
We see in brutes certain sensible instincts antecedent to their imaginative faculty, whereby they are predetermined to the convenience of the sensible life. Hale.

PREDIAL. [predium, Lat.] Consisting of farms.
By the civil law, their predial estates are liable to fiscal payments and taxes, as not being appropriated for the service of divine worship, but for profane uses. Ayliffe.

PREDICABLE. adj. [predicable, Fr. predicabilis, Lat.] Such as may be affirmed of something.
PREDICABLE. n. f. [predicabile, Lat.] A logical term, denoting one of the five things which can be affirmed of any thing.
These they call the five predicables; because every thing that is affirmed concerning any being, must be the genus, species, difference, some property or accident. Watts.

PREDICAMENT. n. f. [predicament, Fr. predicamentum, Lat.] 1. A class or arrangement of beings or substances ranked according to their natures: called also categorema or category.
If there were nothing but bodies to be ranked by them in the predicament of place, then that description would be allowed by them as sufficient. Digby on Badius.

2. Class or kind described by any definitive marks.
The offender's life lies in the mercy
Of the duke only, 'gainst all other voice;
In which predicament I say thou stand'st. Shaksp.

I shew the line and the predicament,
Wherein you range under this subtle king. Shaksp.

PREDICAMENTAL. adj. [from predicament.] Relating to predicaments.
PREDICANT. n. f. [predicant, Lat.] One that affirms any thing.
TO PREDICATE. v. a. [predico, Lat.] To affirm any thing of another thing.
All propositions, wherein a part of the complex idea, which any term stands for, is predicated of that term, are only verbal; v. g. to say that gold is a metal. Locke.

TO PREDICATE. v. n. To hold predestination. In ludicrous language.
His ruff crest he wears,
And pricks up his predesinating ears. Dryden.

PREDESTINATION. n. f. [predesination, Fr. from predesinate.] Fatal decree; pre-ordination.

PRE

To PREDICATE. v. n. To affirm or speak.

It were a presumption to think, that any thing in any created nature can bear any perfect resemblance of the incomprehensible perfection of the divine nature, very being itself not predicating univocally touching him and any created being.

PREDICATE. n. f. [predicatum, Lat.] That which is affirmed of the subject; as man is rational.

The predicate is that which is affirmed or denied of the subject.

PREDICATION. n. f. [predicatio, Lat. from predicate.] Affirmation concerning any thing.

Let us reason from them as well as we can; they are only about identical predications and influence.

To PREDICT. v. a. [prædictus, Lat. predire, Fr.] To foretell; to foreshow.

He is always inveighing against such unequal distributions; nor does he ever cease to predict publick ruins, till his private are repaired.

PREDICTION. n. f. [predictio, Lat. prediction, Fr. from predict.] Prophecy; declaration of something future.

These predictions are to the world in general, as to Caesar.

The predictions of cold and long winters, hot and dry summers, are good to be known.

How soon hath thy prediction, fear blest!

Measur'd this transient world the race of time,

Till time stand fix'd.

In Christ they all meet with an invincible evidence, as if they were not predictions, but after-relations; and the penmen of them not prophets but evangelists.

He, who prophesied the best,

Approves the judgment to the rest;

He'd rather choose, that I should die,

Than his prediction prove a lie.

PREDICTOR. n. f. [from predict.] Foreteller.

Whether he has not been the cause of this poor man's death, as well as the predictor, may be disputed.

PREDIGESTION. n. f. [præ and digestio.] Digestion too soon performed.

Predigestion, or hasty digestion, fills the body full of crudities and seeds of diseases.

To PREDISPOSE. v. a. [præ and dispose.] To adapt previously to any certain purpose.

Vegetable productions require heat of the sun, to predispose and excite the earth and the seeds.

Unless nature be predisposed to friendship by its own propensity, no arts of obligation shall be able to abate the secret hatreds of some persons towards others.

PREDISPOSITION. n. f. [præ and disposition.] Previous adaptation to any certain purpose.

It was conceived to proceed from a malignity in the constitution of the air, gathered by the predispersions of seasons.

Tunes and airs have in themselves some affinity with the affections; so as it is no marvel if they alter the spirits, confounding that tunes have a predispersion to the motion of the spirits.

External accidents are often the occasional cause of the king's evil; but they suppose a predispersion of the body.

PREDOMINANCE. n. f. [præ and domina, Lat.] Prevalence; superiority; ascendancy; superior influence.

We make guilty of our disasters, the sun, the moon and the stars, as if we were knaves, thieves and treacherous by spherical predominance.

An inflammation consists only of a sanguineous affluxion, or else is denominable from other humours, according to the predominancy of melancholy, phlegm or choler.

In human bodies, there is an incessant warfare amongst the humours for predominancy.

The true cause of the Pharisees disbelief of Christ's doctrine, was the predominance of their covetousness and ambition over their will.

The several rays therefore in that white light do retain their coloric qualities, by which those of any sort, whenever they become more copious than the rest, do, by their excess and predominance, cause their proper colour to appear.

PREDOMINANT. adj. [predominant, Fr. præ and dominor.] Prevalent; supreme in influence; ascendent.

Miserable were the condition of that church, the weighty affairs whereof should be ordered by those deliberations, wherein such an humour as this were predominant.

Foul subornation is predominant,

And equity exil'd your highness' land.

It is a planet, that will strike

Where 'tis predominant; and 'tis powerful.

Those helps were overweighed by divers things that made against him, and were predominant in the king's mind.

PRE

Whether the sun, predominant in heav'n,

Rise on the earth; or earth rise on the sun.

I could shew you several pieces, where the beauties of this kind are so predominant, that you could never be able to read or understand them.

To PREDOMINATE. v. n. [predominare, Fr. præ and dominor, Lat.] To prevail; to be ascendent; to be supreme in influence.

So much did love t' her executed lord

Predominate in this fair lady's heart.

The gods formed womens souls out of these principles which compose several kinds of animals; and their good or bad disposition arises, according as such and such principles predominate in their constitutions.

The rays, reflected least obliquely, may predominate over the rest, so much as to cause a heap of such particles to appear very intensely of their colour.

Where judgment is at a loss to determine the choice of a lady who has several lovers, fancy may the more allowably predominate.

To PREDLECT. v. a. [præ and elect.] To chuse by previous decree.

PRE'EMINENCE. n. f. [preeminence, Fr. præ and eminent.] It is sometimes written, to avoid the junction of es, preeminence.

1. Superiority of excellence.

I plead for the preeminence of epick poetry.

Let profit have the preeminence of honour in the end of poetry; pleasure, though but the second in degree, is the first in favour.

The preeminence of christianity to any other religious scheme which preceded it, appears from this, that the most eminent among the Pagan philosophers disclaimed many of those superfluous follies which are condemned by revealed religion.

2. Precedence; priority of place.

His lance brought him captives to the triumph of Artaxia's beauty, such, as though Artaxia be amongst the fairest, yet in that company were to have the preeminence.

He toucheth it as a special preeminence of Junias and Andronicus, that in christianity they were his ancients.

I do invest you jointly with my power,

Preeminences, and all the large effects

That troop with majesty.

The English desired no preeminence, but offered equality both in liberty and privileges, and in capacity of offices and employments.

Am I distinguish'd from you but by toils,

Superior toils, and heavier weight of cares!

Painful preeminence.

3. Superiority of power or influence.

That which standeth on record, hath preeminence above that which passeth from hand to hand, and hath no pens but the tongues, no book but the ears of men.

Beyond the equator, the Southern point of the needle is sovereign, and the North submits his preeminence.

PRE'EMINENT. adj. [preeminent, Fr. præ and eminent.] Excellent above others.

Tell how came I here? by some great maker

In goodness and in pow'r preeminent.

We claim a proper interest above others, in the preeminent rights of the household of faith.

PRE'EMPTION. n. f. [præemptio, Lat.] The right of purchasing before another.

Certain persons, in the reigns of king Edward VI. and queen Mary, fought to make use of this preemption, but crossed in the prosecution, or defeated in their expectation, gave it over.

To PREENGAGE. v. a. [præ and engage.] To engage by precedent ties or contracts.

The world has the unhappy advantage of preengaging our passions, at a time when we have not reflection enough to look beyond the instrument to the hand whose direction it obeys.

To Cipeus by his friends his suit he mov'd,

But he was preengag'd by former ties.

Not only made an instrument;

But preengaged without my own consent.

PREENGAGEMENT. n. f. [from preengage.] Precedent obligation.

My preengagements to other themes were not unknown to those for whom I was to write.

The opinions, suited to their respective tempers, will make way to their assent, in spite of accidental preengagements.

Men are apt to think, that those obediences they pay to God shall, like a preengagement, disannul all after-contracts made by guilt.

As far as opportunity and former preengagements will give leave.

PRE

To PREEN. v. a. [preen, Dutch, to dress or prunk up.] To trim the feathers of birds; to enable them to glide more easily through the air: for this use nature has furnished them with two peculiar glands, which secrete an unctuous matter into a perforated oil bag, out of which the bird, on occasion, draws it with its bill.

To PREESTABLISH. v. a. [præ and establish.] To settle beforehand.

PREESTABLISHMENT. n. f. [from preestablish.] Settlement beforehand.

To PREEXIST. v. a. [præ and exist, Lat.] To exist beforehand.

If thy preexisting soul

Was form'd at first with myriads more,

It did through all the mighty poets roll.

PREEXISTENCE. n. f. [preexistence, Fr. from preexist.] Existence beforehand; existence of the soul before its union with the body.

Wisdom declares her antiquity and preexistence to all the works of this earth.

As Simonides has expos'd the vicious part of women, from the doctrine of preexistence; some of the ancient philosophers have satyzed the vicious part of the human species, from a notion of the soul's postexistence.

PREEXISTENT. adj. [preexistent, Fr. præ and existent.] Existing beforehand; preceding in existence.

Artificial things could not be from eternity, because they suppose man, by whose art they were made, preexistent to them; the workman must be before the work.

Blind to former, as to future fate,

What mortal knows his preexistent state?

If this preexistent eternity is not compatible with a successive duration, then some being, though infinitely above our finite comprehensions, must have had an identical, invariable continuance from all eternity, which being is no other than God.

PREFACE. n. f. [præfatio, Fr. præfatio, Lat.] Something spoken introductory to the main design; introduction; something proemial.

This superficial tale

Is but a preface to her worthy praise.

Sir Thomas More betrayed his depth of judgment in state affairs in his Utopia, than which, in the opinion of Budæus in a preface before it, our age hath not seen a thing more deep.

Heav'n's high behest no preface needs;

Sufficient that thy prayers are heard, and death

Defeated of his seizure.

To PREFACE. v. n. [præfari, Lat.] To say something introductory.

Before I enter upon the particular parts of her character, it is necessary to preface, that she is the only child of a decrepid father.

To PREFACE. v. a.

1. To introduce by something proemial.

Thou art rash,

And must be prefac'd into government.

2. To face; to cover. A ludicrous sense.

I love to wear cloaths that are fluff,

Not prefacing old rags with plush.

PREFACER. n. f. [from preface.] The writer of a preface.

If there be not a tolerable line in all these fix, the prefacer gave me no occasion to write better.

PREFATORY. adj. [from preface.] Introductory.

If this proposition, whoever will be saved, be restrained only to those to whom it was intended, the christians, then the anathema reaches not the heathens, who had never heard of Christ: after all, I am far from blaming even that prefatory addition to the creed.

PREFECT. n. f. [præfectus, Lat.] Governor; commander.

He is much

The better soldier, having been a tribune,

Prefect, lieutenant, praetor in the war.

It was the custom in the Roman empire, for the prefects and vice-roys of distant provinces to transmit a relation of every thing remarkable in their administration.

PREFECTURE. n. f. [præfectura, Lat.] Command; office of government.

To PREFER. v. a. [preferere, Fr. preferre, Lat.]

1. To regard more than another.

With brotherly love, in honour prefer one another.

2. With above before the thing postponed.

If I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth; if I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy.

3. With before.

He that cometh after me, is preferred before me; for he was before me.

It may worthily seem unto you a most shameful thing, to have preferred an infamous peace before a most just war.

O spirit, that dost prefer

Before all temples th' upright heart.

PRE

4. With to.

Would he rather leave this frantic scene,

And trees and beasts prefer to courts and men.

5. To advance; to exalt; to raise.

By the recommendation of the earl of Dunbar, he was prefer'd to the bishoprick of Coventry and Litchfield.

He spake, and to her hand prefer'd the bowl.

6. To offer solemnly; to propose publicly; to exhibit.

They flatly disavouch

To yield him more obedience or support;

And as t' a perjurd duke of Lancaster,

Their cartel of defiance they prefer.

I, when my soul began to faint,

My vows and prayers to thee prefer'd;

The lord my passionate complaint,

Even from his holy temple, heard.

Prefer a bill against all kings and parliaments since the conquest; and if that won't do, challenge the crown and the two houses.

Take care,

Left thou prefer so rash a pray'r;

Nor vainly hope the queen of love

Will e'er thy fav'rite's charms improve.

Every person within the church or commonwealth may prefer an accusation, that the delinquent may suffer condign punishment.

PREFERABLE. adj. [preferable, Fr. from prefer.] Eligible before something else. With to commonly before the thing refused.

The stronger ties we have to an unalterable pursuit of happiness, which is greatest good, the more are we free from any necessary compliance with our desire, set upon any particular, and then appearing preferable good, till we have duly examined it.

Though it be incumbent on parents to provide for their children, yet this debt to their children does not quite cancel the score due to their parents; but only is made by nature preferable to it.

Almost every man in our nation is a politician, and hath a scheme of his own, which he thinks preferable to that of any other.

Even in such a state as this, the pleasures of virtue would be superior to those of vice, and justly preferable.

PREFERABLENESS. adj. [from preferable.] The state of being preferable.

PREFERABLY. adv. [from preferable.] In preference; in such a manner as to prefer one thing to another.

How came he to chuse a comick preferably to the tragick poets; or how comes he to chuse Plautus preferably to Terence.

PREFERENCE. n. f. [preferentia, Fr. from prefer.]

1. The act of preferring; estimation of one thing above another; election of one rather than another.

It gives as much due to good works, as is consistent with the grace of the gospel; it gives as much preference to divine grace, as is consistent with the precepts of the gospel.

Leave the critics on either side, to contend about the preference due to this or that sort of poetry.

We find in ourselves a power to begin or forbear several actions of our minds and motions of our bodies, barely by a thought or preference of the mind, ordering the doing, or not doing such a particular action.

The several musical instruments in the hands of the Apollo's, Mules and Fauns, might give light to the dispute for preference between the ancient and modern musick.

A secret pleasure touch'd Athena's soul

To see the preference due to sacred age

PRE

Princes must, by a vigorous exercise of that law, make it every man's interest and honour to cultivate religion and virtue, by rendering vice a disgrace, and the certain ruin to pre-ferment or pretensions. Swift.

2. A place of honour or profit.

All preferments should be placed upon fit men. L'Estrange.

3. Preference; act of preferring. Not in use.

All which declare a natural preference of the one unto the motion before the other. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PREFERRER. [from prefer.] One who prefers.

TO PREFIGURATE. v. a. [præ and figura, Lat.] To shew by an antecedent representation.

PREFIGURATION. n. f. [from præfigurate.] Antecedent representation.

The same providence that hath wrought the one, will work the other; the former being pledges, as well as præfigurations of the latter. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

The variety of prophecies and præfigurations had their punctual accomplishment in the author of this institution. Norris.

TO PREFIGURE. v. a. [præ and figura, Lat.] To exhibit by antecedent representation.

What the Old Testament hath, the very same the New containeth; but that which lieth there, as under a shadow, is here brought forth into the open sun; things there præfigured, are here performed. Hooker.

Such piety, so chaste use of God's day,

That what we turn to feast, the turn'd to pray,

And did præfigure here in devout taste,

The rest of her high sabbath, which shall last. Donne.

If shame superadded to loss, and both met together, as the sinners portion here, perfectly præfiguring the two saddest ingredients in hell, deprivation of the blissful vision, and confusion of face, cannot prove efficacious to the mortifying of vice, the church doth give over the patient. Hammond.

TO PREFIGURE. v. a. [præfigere, Fr. præfigis, Lat.] To limit beforehand.

He, in his immoderate desires, præfiged unto himself three years, which the great monarchs of Rome could not perform in so many hundreds. Knollet's Hist. of the Turks.

TO PREFIX. v. a. [præfixe, Lat.]

1. To appoint beforehand.

At the præfix'd hour of her awaking,

Came I to take her from her kindred's vault. Shakespeare.

A time præfixe, and think of me at last!

Its inundation constantly increaseth the seventh day of June; wherein a larger form of speech were safer, than that which punctually præfixeth a constant day. Brown.

Booth's forward valour only serv'd to show,

He durst that duty pay we all did owe:

Th' attempt was fair; but heav'n's præfix'd hour

Not come. Dryden.

2. To settle; to establish.

Because I would præfixe some certain boundary between them, the old statutes end with king Edward II. the new or later statutes begin with king Edward III. Hale's Law of England.

These boundaries of species are as men, and not as nature makes them; if there are in nature any such præfix'd bounds. Locke.

3. To put before another thing: as, be præfix'd an advertisement to his book.

PREFIX. n. f. [præfixum, Lat.] Some particle put before a word, to vary its signification.

In the Hebrew language the noun has its præfixa and affixa, the former to signify some few relations, and the latter to denote the pronouns possessive and relative. Clarke.

It is a præfix of augmentation to many words in that language. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PREFIXION. n. f. [præfixion, Fr. from præfix.] The act of prefixing. Diét.

TO PRÆFORM. v. a. [præ and form.] To form beforehand.

If you consider the true cause,

Why all these things change, from their ordinance,

Their natures and præform'd faculties,

To monstrous quality; why you shall find,

That heav'n made them instruments of fear

Unto some monstrous state. Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.

PREGNANCY. n. f. [from pregnant.]

1. The state of being with young.

The breast is encompass'd with ribs, and the belly left free, for respiration; and in females, for that extraordinary extension in the time of their pregnancy. Ray on the Creation.

Fertility; fruitfulness; inventive power; acuteness.

Pregnancy is made a tapster, and hath his quick wit wasted in giving reckonings. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

This writer, out of the pregnancy of his invention, hath found out an old way of insinuating the grossest reflections upon the appearance of admonitions. Swift's Miscel.

PREGNANT. adj. [pregnant, Fr. prægnant, Lat.]

1. Teeming; breeding.

Thou

Dove-like sat'st brooding on the vast abyss,

And mad'st it pregnant. Milton.

His town, as fame reports, was built of old

By Danae, pregnant with almighty gold. Dryden.

PRE

Through either ocean, foolish man!

That pregnant word sent forth again,

Might to a world extend each atom there,

For every drop call forth a sea, a heav'n for ev'ry star. Pri.

2. Fruitful; fertile; impregnating.

All these in their pregnant causes mixt;

With pregnant streams, to rush amain

Full of consequence. Dryden.

These knew not the just motives and pregnant grounds, with which I thought myself furnished. King Charles.

An egregious and pregnant instance how far virtue surpasses ingenuity. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

O detestable, passive obedience! did I ever imagine I should become thy votary in so pregnant an instance. Arb.

4. Evident; plain; clear; full. An obsolete sense.

This granted, as it is a most pregnant and unforc'd position, who stands so eminent in the degree of this fortune as Calio?

a knave very voluble. Shakespeare. Othello.

Were't not that we stand up against them all,

'Twere pregnant, they should square between themselves.

Shakespeare. Antony and Cleopatra.

5. Easy to produce any thing.

A most poor man made tame to fortune's blows,

Who by the art of known and feeling sorrows,

Am pregnant to good pity. Shakespeare. King Lear.

6. Free; kind. Obsolete.

My matter hath no voice, but to your own most pregnant and vouchsafed ear. Shakespeare.

PREGNANTLY. adv. [from pregnant.]

1. Fruitfully.

2. Fully; plainly; clearly.

A thousand moral paintings I can shew,

That shall demonstrate these quick blows of fortune

More pregnantly than words. Shakespeare. Timon of Athens.

The dignity of this office among the Jews is so pregnantly set forth in holy writ, that it is unquestionable; kings and priests are mentioned together. South's Sermons.

PREGUSTATION. n. f. [præ and gusto, Lat.] The act of tasting before another.

TO PRÆJUDGE. v. a. [præjuge, Fr. præ and judicio, Lat.] To determine any question beforehand; generally to condemn beforehand.

If he stood upon his own title of the house of Lancaster, he knew it was condemn'd in parliament, and præjudged in the common opinion of the realm, and that it tended to the disinheritance of the line of York. Baron's Henry VII.

The child was strong and able, though born in the eight month, which the physicians do præjudge. Bacon.

The committee of council hath præjudged the whole case, by calling the united sense of both houses of parliament an universal clamour. Swift.

Some action ought to be entered, lest a greater cause should be injured and præjudged thereby. Swift.

TO PRÆJUDICATE. v. a. [præ and judicio, Lat.] To determine beforehand to disadvantage.

Our dearest friend

Præjudicates the business, and would seem

To have us make denial. Shakespeare.

Are you, in favour of his person, bent

Thus to præjudicate the innocent? Sandy.

PRÆJUDICATE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Formed by prejudice; formed before examination.

This rule of casting away all our former præjudicate opinions, is not proposed to any of us to be practised at once as subjects or christians, but merely as philosophers. Warr.

2. Prejudiced; prepossessed.

Their works will be embraced by most that understand them, and their reasons enforce belief from præjudicate

readers. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PRÆJUDICATION. n. f. [from præjudicate.] The act of judging beforehand.

PRÆJUDICE. n. f. [præjudicet, Fr. præjudicium, Lat.]

1. Prepossession; judgment formed beforehand without examination. It is used for prepossession in favour of any thing or against it. It is sometimes used with to before that which the præjudice is against, but not properly.

The king himself frequently considered more the person who spoke, as he was in his præjudice, than the counsel itself that was given. Clarendon, b. viii.

My comfort is, that their manifest præjudice to my cause will render their judgment of less authority. Dryden.

There is an unaccountable præjudice to projectors of all kinds, for which reason, when I talk of practising to fly silly people think me an owl for my pains. Addison.

2. Mischief; detriment; hurt; injury. This sense is only accidental or consequential; a bad thing being called a præjudice, only because præjudice is commonly a bad thing, and is not derived from the original or etymology of the word: it were therefore better to use it less; perhaps præjudice ought never to be applied to any mischief, which does not imply some partiality or prepossession. In some of the following examples its impropriety will be discovered. I have

PRE

I have not spake one the least word,

That might be præjudice of her present state,

Or touch of her good person. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.

England and France might, through their amity,

Breed him some præjudice; for from this league

Peep'd harms that menac'd him. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.

Factions carried too high and too violently, is a sign of weakness in princes, and much to the præjudice of their authority and business. Bacon.

How plain this abuse is, and what præjudice it does to the understanding of the sacred scriptures. Locke.

A prince of this character will instruct us by his example, to fix the unsteadiness of our politics; or by his conduct hinder it from doing us any præjudice. Addison.

TO PRÆJUDICE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To prepossess with unexamined opinions; to fill with prejudices.

Half-pillars wanted their expected height,

And roofs imperfect præjudic'd the light. Prior.

Suffer not any beloved study to præjudice your mind, so far as to despise all other learning. Watts.

No inares to captivate the mind he spreads,

Nor bribes your eyes to præjudice your heads. Anonym.

2. To obstruct or injure by prejudices previously raised.

Companies of learned men, be they never so great and reverend, are to yield unto reason; the weight whereof is no white præjudice by the simplicity of his person, which doth allege it. Hooker, b. ii. f. 7.

Neither must his example, done without the book, præjudice that which is well appointed in the book. Whitby.

I am not to præjudice the cause of my fellow-poets, though

I abandon my own defence. Dryden.

3. To injure; to hurt; to diminish; to impair; to be detrimental to. This sense, as in the noun, is often improperly extended to meanings that have no relation to the original sense; who can read with patience of an ingredient that præ- judices a medicine?

The strength of that law is such, that no particular nation can lawfully præjudice the same by any their several laws and ordinances, more than a man by his private resolutions, the law of the whole commonwealth wherein he liveth. Hooker.

The Danube rescu'd, and the empire sav'd,

Say, is the majesty of verse retriev'd?

He would it præjudice thy foster vein,

To sing the princess, Louis and Eugene? Prior.

To this is added a vinous bitter, warmer in the composition of its ingredients than the watry infusion; and, as gentian and lemon-peel make a bitter of so grateful a flavour, the only care required in this composition was to chuse such an addition as might not præjudice it. London Dispensatory.

PRÆJUDICIAL. adj. [præjudicialis, Fr. from præjudice.]

1. Obstructive by means of opposite prepossessions.

2. Contrary; opposite.

What one syllable is there, in all this, præjudicial any way to that which we hold? Hooker, b. ii. f. 5.

3. Mischiefous; hurtful; injurious; detrimental. This sense is improper. See PRÆJUDICE, noun and verb.

His going away the next morning with all his troops, was most præjudicial and most ruinous to the king's affairs. Clarend.

One of the young ladies reads, while the others are at work; so that the learning of the family is not at all præju- dicial to its manufactures. Addison's Guardian.

A state of great prosperity, as it exposes us to various temptations, so it is often præjudicial to us, in that it swells

the mind with undue thoughts. Atterbury's Sermons.

PRÆJUDICIALNESS. n. f. [from præjudicial.] The state of being præjudicial; mischiefousness.

PRÆJACIOUS. n. f. [from præjacio.]

1. The dignity or post of a prelate or ecclesiastick of the highest order.

Præjacies may be termed the greater benefices; as that of

PRE

Verse is not the effect of sudden thought; but this hinders not, that sudden thought may be represented in verse, since those thoughts must be higher than nature can raise without premeditation. Dryden on Dramatic Poetry.

PREMICES. n. f. [primitia, Lat. premier, Fr.] First fruits.

A charger, yearly filled with fruits, was offered to the gods at their festivals, as the premier or first gatherings. Dry.

PREMIER. adj. [French.] First; chief.

The Spaniard challengeth the premier place, in regard of his dominions. Camden's Remains.

Thus families like realms, with equal fate,
Are sunk by premier ministers of state. Swift.

TO PREMISE. v. a. [premissus, Lat.]

1. To explain previously; to lay down premises.

The apostle's discourse here is an answer upon a ground taken; he premiseth, and then infers. Burnet.

I promise these particulars, that the reader may know I enter upon it as a very ungrateful task. Addison.

2. To send before the time. Not in use.

O let the vile world end,
And the promised flames of the last day

Knit earth and heav'n together! Shakefp. Henry VI.

TO PREMISE. v. a. [premier, Lat.] To deserve before.

They did not forgive Sir John Hotham, who had so much promerited of them. King Charles.

PREMISES. n. f. [premissio, Lat. premisses, Fr.]

1. Propositions antecedently supposed or proved.

They infer upon the premises, that as great difference as commodiously may be, there should be in all outward ceremonies between the people of God, and them which are not his people. Hooker, b. iv. f. 7.

This is so regular an inference, that whilst the premises stand firm, it is impossible to shake the conclusion. Decay of Piety.

She study'd well the point, and found

Her foes conclusions were not found,

From premises erroneous brought,

And therefore the deduction's nought. Swift's Miscel.

2. In low language, houses or lands; as, I was upon the premises.

PREMISS. n. f. [premissum, Lat.] Antecedent proposition.

This word is rare in the singular.

They know the major or minor, which is implied, when you pronounce the other premiss and the conclusion. Watts.

PREMIUM. n. f. [premium, Lat.] Something given to invite a loan or a bargain.

No body cares to make loans upon a new project; whereas men never fail to bring in their money upon a land-tax, when the premium or interest allowed them is suited to the hazard they run. Addison's Freeholder, N° 23.

People were tempted to lend, by great premiums and large interest; and it concerned them to preserve that government, which they had trusted with their money. Swift's Miscel.

TO PREMONISH. v. a. [premonere, Lat.] To warn or admonish beforehand.

PREMONISHMENT. n. f. [premonitio, Lat.] Previous information.

TO PREOCCUPATE. v. a. [preoccupare, Fr. preoccupe, Lat.]

1. To anticipate.

Honour aspires to death; grief fleeth to it; and fear preoccupies it. Bacon.

2. To preoccupy; to fill with prejudices.

That the model be plain without colours, left the eye preoccupate the judgment. Watson's Architecture.

PREOCCUPATION. n. f. [preoccupation, Fr. from preoccupare.]

1. Anticipation.

2. Prepossession.

3. Anticipation of objection.

As if, by way of preoccupation, he should have said; well, here you see your commission, this is your duty, these are your discouragements; never seek for evasions from worldly afflictions; this is your reward, if you perform it; this is your doom, if you decline it. South's Sermons.

TO PREOCCUPY. v. a. To preoccupy; to occupy by anticipation or prejudices.

I think it more respectful to the reader to leave something to reflections, than preoccupy his judgment. Arbutnot.

TO PREOMINATE. v. a. [præ and ominis, Lat.] To prognosticate; to gather from omens any future event.

Because many ravens were seen when Alexander entered Babylon, they were thought to preominate his death. Brown.

PREOPINION. n. f. [præ and opinio, Lat.] Opinion antecedently formed; prepossession.

Diet holds no solid rule of selection; some, in indistinct voracity, eating almost any; others, out of a timorous preopinion, refraining from very many things. Brown.

TO PREORDAIN. v. a. [præ and ordain.] To ordain beforehand.

Sin is the contrariety to the will of God, and if all things be preordained by God, and so demonstrated to be willed by him, it remains there is no such thing as sin. Hammond.

Few souls preordain'd by fate,

The race of gods have reach'd that envy'd state. Roscom.

PREORDINANCE. n. f. [præ and ordinantia.] Antecedent decree; first decree. Not in use.

These lowly courties

Might stir the blood of ordinary men,

And turn preordinance and first decree

Into the law of children. Shakefp. Julius Cæsar.

PREORDINATION. n. f. [from preordain.] The act of preordaining.

PREPARATION. n. f. [preparatio, Lat. preparation, Fr. from prepare.]

1. The act of preparing or previously fitting any thing to any purpose.

Nothing hath proved more fatal to that due preparation for another life, than our unhappy mistake of the nature and end of this. Wake's Preparation for Death.

2. Previous measures.

I will show what preparations there were in nature for this great dissolution, and after what manner it came to pass. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

3. Ceremonious introduction.

I make bold to præ, with so little preparation, upon you. —You're welcome. Shakefp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

4. The act of making or fitting by a regular process.

In the preparations of cookery, the most volatile parts of vegetables are destroyed. Arbutnot on Aliments.

5. Any thing made by process of operation.

I with the chymists had been more sparing, who magnify their preparations, inveigle the curiosity of many, and delude the security of most. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

6. Accomplishment; qualification. Out of use.

Sir John, you are a gentleman of excellent breeding, authentick in your place and person, generally allowed for your many warlike, courtlike and learned preparations. Shakefp.

PREPARATIVE. adj. [preparativus, Lat. from prepare.] Having the power of preparing or qualifying.

Would men have spent toilsome days and watchful nights in the laborious quest of knowledge preparative to this work. South's Sermons.

PRE

PREPARATIVE. n. f. [preparativus, Fr. from prepare.]

1. That which has the power of preparing or previously fitting.

They tell us the profit of reading is singular, in that it serveth for a preparative unto sermons. Hooker.

My book of advancement of learning may be some preparative or key for the better opening of the institution. Bacon.

Resolvedness in sin can, with no reason, be imagined a preparative to remission. Decay of Piety.

2. That which is done in order to something else.

The miseries, which have ensued, may be yet, through thy mercy, preparatives to us of future blessings. K. Charles.

Such a temper is a contradiction to repentance, as being founded in the destruction of those qualities, which are the only dispositions and preparatives to it. South's Sermons.

What avails it to make all the necessary preparatives for our voyage, if we do not actually begin the journey. Dryden.

PREPARATIVELY. adv. [preparative, Fr.] Previously; by way of preparation.

It is preparatively necessary to many useful things in this life, as to make a man a good physician. Hale.

PREPARATORY. adj. [preparatoire, Fr.]

1. Antecedently necessary.

The practice of all these is proper to our condition in this world, and preparatory to our happiness in the next. Tillotson.

2. Introductory; previous; antecedent.

Preparatory, limited and formal interrogatories in writing preclude this way of occasional interrogatories. Hale.

Rains were but preparatory, the violence of the deluge depended upon the disruption of the great abyss. Burnet.

TO PREPARE. v. a. [preparo, Lat. preparari, Fr.]

1. To fit for any thing; to adjust to any use; to make ready for any purpose.

Patient Octavia, plough thy visage up

With her prepared nails. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleop.

Confound the peace establish'd, and prepare

Their souls to hatred, and their hands to war. Dryden.

Our souls, not yet prepar'd for upper light,

Till doomday wander in the shades of night. Dryden.

The beams of light had been in vain display'd,

Had not the eye been fit for vision made;

In vain the author had the eye prepar'd

With so much skill, had not the light appear'd. Blackmore.

2. To qualify for any purpose.

Some preachers, being prepared only upon two or three points of doctrine, run the same round. Addison.

3. To make ready beforehand.

There he maketh the hungry to dwell, that they may prepare a city for habitation. Psalms cviii. 36.

TO PREPONDER. v. a. [from preponderare.] To outweigh.

Though pillars by channelling be seemingly ingroffed to our sight, yet they are truly weakened; and therefore ought not to be the more slender, but the more corpulent, unless appearances preponder truths. Watson's Architecture.

PRE

PREPONDERANCE. n. f. [from preponderare.] The state of

PREPONDERANCY. n. f. [from preponderare.] The state of

As to addition of ponderosity in dead bodies, comparing them unto blocks, this occasional preponderancy is rather an appearance than reality. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The mind should examine all the grounds of probability; and, upon a due balancing the whole, reject or receive proportionably to the preponderancy of the greater grounds of probability. Locke.

Little light boats were the ships which people used, to the sides wherof this fifth remora fastenings, might make it swag, as the least preponderance on either side will do, and so retard its course. Grew's Museum.

TO PREPONDERATE. v. a. [prepondero, Lat.]

1. To outweigh; to overpower by weight.

An inconsiderable weight, by distance from the centre of the balance, will preponderate greater magnitudes. Glanvill.

The triviallest thing, when a passion is cast into the scale with it, preponderates substantial blessings. Gou. of the Tongue.

2. To overpower by stronger influence.

TO PREPONDERATE. v. n.

1. To exceed in weight.

He that would make the lighter scale preponderate, will not so soon do it, by adding increase of new weight to the emptier, as if he took out of the heavier, what he adds to the lighter. Locke.

Unless the very mathematical center of gravity of every system be placed and fixed in the very mathematical center of the attractive power of all the rest, they cannot be evenly attracted on all sides, but must preponderate some way or other. Bentley's Sermons.

2. To exceed in influence or power analogous to weight.

In matters of probability, we cannot be sure that we have all particulars before us, and that there is no evidence behind, which may outweigh all that at present seems to preponderate with us. Locke.

By putting every argument on one side and the other into the balance, we must form a judgment which side preponderates. Watts.

PREPONDERATION. n. f. [from preponderare.] The act or state of outweighing any thing.

In matters, which require present practice, we must content ourselves with a mere preponderation of probable reasons. Watts's Logic.

TO PREPOSE. v. a. [proponere, Fr. propono, Lat.] To put before.

confirmation of the kings of Assyria. Kneller.

They are the best laws, by which the king hath the justest prerogative, and the people the best liberty. Bacon.

Had any of these second causes despoiled God of his prerogative, or had God himself constrained the mind and will of man to impious acts by any celestial enforcements? Raleigh.

They obtained another royal prerogative and power, to make war and peace at their pleasure. Davies.

The house of commons to their prerogative over the lords, sent an order to the lieutenant of the tower, that he should cause him to be executed that very day. Clarendon.

For freedom still maintain'd alive,
Freedom an English subjects' sole prerogative, Accept our pious praise. Dryden.

All with the dire prerogative to kill,
Ev'n they would have the pow'r, who want the will. Dryden.

It seems to be the prerogative of human understanding, when it has distinguished any ideas, so as to perceive them to be different, to consider in what circumstances they are capable to be compared. Locke.

I will not consider only the prerogatives of man above other animals, but the endowments which nature hath conferred on his body in common with them. Roy on the Creation.

PREROGATIVED. adj. [from prerogative.] Having an exclusive privilege; having prerogative.

'Tis the plague of great ones,
Prerogativ'd are they less than the base; Shakesp.

'Tis destiny unshunnable.
Præ, præ, præ, seem to be derived from the Saxon, pre, pre, pre,

PRESBYTERY. n. f. [from presbyter.] Body of elders, whether priests or laymen.

Those which stood for the presbytery, thought their cause had more sympathy with the discipline of Scotland than the hierarchy of England. Bacon.

Then-bitten synod, an assembly brew'd
Of clerks and elders anal, like the rude
Chaos of presby, where laymen guide.

With the tame woolpack clergy by their side. Cleaveland.

PRESCIENCE. n. f. [from præ, Fr. præ, Lat.] Foreknowledge; knowledge of future things.

They tax our policy, and call it cowardice,
Foretell our præ, and esteem no act
But that of hand. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

Præ or foreknowledge, considered in order and nature, if we may speak of God after the manner of men, goeth before providence; for God foreknew all things before he had created them, or before they had being to be cared for; and præ is no other than an infallible foreknowledge. Rail.

If certain præ of uncertain events imply a contradiction, it seems it may be struck out of the omniscience of God, and leave no blemish behind. Mor.

Of things of the most accidental and mutable nature, God's præ is certain. South.

Freedom was first bestow'd on human race,
And præ only held the second place. Dryden.

Amongst his subjects and his loyal friends,
As it disanimates his enemies. Shakesp. Henry VI.

2. Approach face to face to a great personage.

The shepherd Dorus answered with such a trembling voice and abashed countenance, and oftentimes so far from the matter, that it was some sport to the young ladies, thinking it want of education, which made him so discountenanced with unwonted præ. Sidney, b. i.

Men that very præ fear,
Which once they knew authority did bear!

3. State of being in the view of a superior.

Thou know'st the law of arms is such,
That, who draws a sword in th' præ 't's death. Sha.

I know not by what power I am made bold,
In such a præ here, to plead my thoughts. Shakesp.

Widow thy sister, and with her did I play
In præ of th' Almighty. Milton.

Perhaps I have not so well consulted the repute of my intellectuals, in bringing their imperfections into such discerning præ. Glanvill's Scap.

Since clinging cares and trains of inbred fears,
Not aw'd by arms, but in the præ bold,
Without respect to purple or to gold. Dryden.

4. A number assembled before a great person.

Look I so pale.
—Ay; and no man in the præ,
But his red colour hath forsook his cheeks. Shakesp.

Odmar, of all this præ does contain,
Give her your wreath whom you esteem most fair. Dryden.

5. Port; air; mien; demeanour.

Virtue is best in a body that is comely, and that hath rather dignity of præ, than beauty of aspect. Bacon.

A graceful præ bespeaks acceptance, gives a force to language, and helps to convince by look and posture. Collier.

How great his præ, how erect his look,
How e'er grace, how all his virtuous mother Shines in his face, and charms me from his eyes. Smith.

6. Room in which a prince shows himself to his court.

By them they pass, all gazing on them round,
And to the præ mount, whole glorious view
Their frail amazed senses did confound. Fairy Queen.

Wait in the præ. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

The lady Anne of Bretagne, passing through the præ in the court of France, and espousing Chartier, a famous poet, leaning upon his elbow fast asleep, openly kissing him, said, we must honour with our kiss, the mouth from whence so many sweet verses have proceeded. Peacham.

7. Readiness at need; quickness at expedients.

A good bodily strength is a felicity of nature, but nothing comparable to a large understanding and ready præ of mind. L'Estrange.

Errors, not to be recall'd, do find
Their best redress from præ of the mind, Courage our greatest failings does supply. Waller.

8. The person of a superior.

To her the sov'reign præ thus reply'd. Milton.

PRESence-CHAMBER. n. f. [from præ and chamber or room.]

PRESence-ROOM. } The room in which a great person receives company.

If these nerves, which are the conduits to convey them from without to their audience in the brain, the mind's præ, are so disordered, as not to perform their functions,
they have no power to be admitted by. Locke.

Kneller, with silence and surprise,
We see Britannia's monarch rise,
And aw'd by thy delusive hand,
As in the præ chamber stand. Addison.

PRESence. n. f. [from præ, Lat.] Perception beforehand.

The hedgehog's præ of winds is exact. Brown.

PRESent. adj. [from præ, Fr. præ, Lat.]

1. Not absent; being face to face; being at hand.

But neither of these are any impediment, because the regent thereof is of an infinite immensity more than commen-surate to the extent of the world, and such as is most intimately præ with all the beings of the world. Hale.

Be not often præ at feasts, not at all in dissolute company; pleasing objects steal away the heart. Taylor.

Much I have heard
Incredible to me, in this displeas'd,
That I was never præ on the place
Of those encounters. Milton's Agonistes.

2. Not past; not future.

Thou future things can't represent
As præ. Milton.

The moments pass, if thou art wise, retrieve
With pleasant mem'ry of the bliss they gave;
The præ hours in pleasant mirth employ,
And bribe the future with the hopes of joy.

The præ age hath not been less inquisitive than the former ages were. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

3. Ready at hand; quick in emergencies.

If a man write little, he had need have a great memory;
if he confer little, he had need have a præ wit; and if he read little, he had need have much cunning. Bacon.

'Tis a high point of philosophy and virtue for a man to be so præ to himself, as to be always provided against all accidents. L'Estrange.

4. Favourably attentive; not neglectful; propitious.

Be præ to her now, as then,
And let not proud and factious men Against your wills oppose their mights. Benj. Johnson.

The golden goddess, præ at the pray'r,
Well knew he meant th' inanimated fair,
And gave the sign of granting his desire. Dryden.

THE PRESENT. An elliptical expression for the present time; the time now existing.

When he saw descend
The son of God to judge them, terrify'd
He fled; not hoping to escape, but thin
The present; fearing guilty, what his wrath Might suddenly inflict. Milton.
Men that set their hearts only upon the present, without looking forward into the end of things are struck at. L'Estr.
Who, since their own short understandings reach
No further than the present, think ev'n the wife, Speak what they think, and tell tales of themselves. Rowe.
At PRESENT. [à présent, Fr.] At the present time; now;
elliptically, for the present time.
The state is at present very sensible of the decay in their trade. Addison.

PRESENT. n. f. [présent, Fr. from the verb.]
1. A gift; a donative; something ceremoniously given.
Plain Clarence!

I will send thy soul to heav'n,
If heav'n will take the present at our hands. Shakespeare.
His dog to-morrow, by his master's command, he must carry for a present to his lady.
He sent part of the rich spoil, with the admiral's ensign, as a present unto Solyman. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.
Say heav'nly muse, shall not thy sacred vein
Afford a present to the infant God?
Hast thou no verse, no hymn, no solemn strain,
To welcome him to this his new abode? Milton.
They that are to love inclin'd,
Sway'd by chance, not choice or art
To the first that's fair or kind,
Make a present of their heart. Waller.
Somewhat is sure design'd by fraud or force;
Trust not their resents, nor admit the horse. Dryden.
2. A letter or mandate exhibited.
Be it known to all men by these resents. Shakespeare.
To PRESENT. v. a. [présente, low Lat. presenter, Fr. in all the senses.]

1. To place in the presence of a superior.
On to the sacred hill
They led him high applauded, and present
Before the seat supreme. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.
2. To exhibit to view or notice.
He knows not what he says; and vain is it,
That we present us to him. Shakespeare. King Lear.
3. To offer; to exhibit.
Thou therefore now advise,
Or hear what to my mind first thoughts present. Milton.
Now ev'ry leaf, and ev'ry moving breath
Presents a foe, and ev'ry foe a death. Dryden.
Lectur'd memory is ever ready to offer to his mind something out of other men's writings or conversations, and is presenting him with the thoughts of other persons perceptually. Watson's Improvement of the Mind.

4. To give formally and ceremoniously.
Folks in mudwall tenements,
Affording pepper-corn for rent,
Present a turkey or a hen
To those might better spare them ten. Prior.
5. To put into the hands of another.
So ladies in romance assist their knight,
Present the spear, and arm him for the fight. Dryden.
6. To favour with gifts. To present, in the sense of to give, has several structures: we say absolutely, to present a man, to give something to him. This is less in use. The common phrases are to present a gift to a man; or, to present the man with a gift.
Thou spendest thy time in waiting upon such a great one, and thy estate in presenting him; and, after all, halt no other reward, but sometimes to be smiled upon, and always to be smiled at. South's Sermons.

He now presents, as ancient ladies do,
That courted long, at length are forc'd to woo. Dryden.
Octavia presented the poet, for his admirable elegy on her son Marcellus. Dryden.
Should I present thee with rare figur'd plate,
O how thy rising heart would throb and beat. Dryden.
7. To prefer to ecclesiastical benefices.
That he put these bishops in the places of the deceased by his own authority, is notoriously false; for the duke of Saxony always presented. Atterbury.
8. To offer openly.
He was appointed admiral, and presented battle to the French navy, which they refused. Hayward.
9. To introduce by something exhibited to the view or notice.
Not in use.
Tell on, quoth she, the woful tragedy,
The which these reliques had present unto. Spenser.

10. To lay before a court of judicature, as an object of enquiry.
The grand juries were practised effectually with to present the said pamphlet, with all aggravating epithets. Swift.

PRESENTA'NEOUS. adj. [from præsentaneus, Lat.] Ready; quick; immediate.

Some plagues partake of such malignity, that, like a pre-sentaneous poison, they enocate in two hours. Harvey.
PRESENTABLE. adj. [from præsent.] What may be presented.
Incumbents of churches presentable cannot, by their sole act, grant their incumbencies to others; but may make leaves of the profits thereof. Ayliffe's Paragon.

PRESENTATION. n. f. [présentation, Fr. from præsent.]
1. The act of presenting.

Prayers are sometimes a presentation of mere desires, as a mean of procuring desired effects at the hands of God. Hooker.
2. The act of offering any one to an ecclesiastical benefice.
He made effectual provision for recovery of advowsons and presentations to churches. Vale.

What, shall the curate controul me? have not I the presentation? Gay.
3. Exhibition.

These presentations of fighting on the stage, are necessary to produce the effects of an heroic play. Dryden.
4. This word is misapplied for pre-cession.

Although in sundry animals, we deny not a kind of natural meteorology, or innate presentation both of wind and weather, yet that proceeding from sense, they cannot retain that apprehension after death. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PRESENTATIVE. adj. [from præsent.] Such as presentations may be made of it.

Mrs. Gullion possid of the inappropriate parsonage of Bar-well, did procure from the king leave to annex the same to the vicarage, and to make it presentative, and gave them both to St. John's College in Oxon. Spelman.

PRESENTÉE. n. f. [from présenté, Fr.] One presented to a benefice.

Our laws make the ordinary a disturber, if he does not give institution upon the fitness of a person presented to him, or at least give notice to the patron of the disability of his presentee. Ayliffe's Paragon.

PRESENTER. n. f. [from præsent.] One that presents.

The thing was acceptable, but not the presenter. L'Estr.
PRESENTIAL. adj. [from præsent.] Supporting actual presence.
By union, I do not understand that which is local or presential, because I consider God as omnipresent. North.

PRESENTIALITY. n. f. [from présential.] State of being present.

This eternal, indivisible act of his existence makes all figures actually present to him; and it is the présentiality of the object, which founds the unerring certainty of his knowledge. South's Sermons.

To PRESENTIATE. v. a. [from præsent.] To make present.
The fancy may be so strong, as to presentiate upon one theatre, all that ever it took notice of in times past: the power of fancy, in presentiating any one thing that is past, being no less wonderful, than having that power, it should also acquire the perfection to presentiate them all. Greene.

PRESENTIFICK. adj. [présentif, and fais, Latin.] Making present. Not in use.

PRESENTIFICKLY. adv. [from présentifick.] In such a manner as to make present.

The whole evolution of times and ages, from everlasting to everlasting, is collectedly and présentifickly represented to God at once, as if all things and actions were, at this very instant, really present and existent before him. Mare.

PRESENTLY. adv. [from præsent.]

1. At present; at this time; now.

The towns and forts you présently have, are still left unto you to be kept either with or without garrisons, so as you alter not the laws of the country. Shirley.

I hope we may presume, that a rare thing it is not in the church of God, even for that very word which is read to be présently their joy, and afterwards their study that hear it. Hooker, b. v. c. 2.

To speak of it as requir'd, would require very long discourse; all I will présently say is this. Hooker, b. i. c. 10.
Covetous ambition, thinking all too little which présently it hath, supposeth itself to stand in need of all which it hath not. Raleigh's Essays.

2. Immediately; soon after.

Tell him, that no history can match his policies, and presently the lot shall measure himself by himself. South.

PRESENTMENT. n. f. [from præsent.]

1. The act of presenting.

When comes your book forth?
Upon the heels of my presentment. Shakespeare.

2. Any thing prebent or exhibited; representation.

Thus I had
My dazzling spells into the sunny air,
Of power to cheat the eye with bear illusion,
And give it false presentments, left the place
And my quaint habits breed astonishment. Milton.

3. In law, presentment is a mere denunciation of the jurors themselves or some other officer, as justice, constable, leathers, inveyors, and, without any information, of an offence inable in the court to which it is presented. Cowd.

courage, and présentness of mind in danger. Clarendon.

PRESERVATION. n. f. [from præserve.] The act of preserving; care to preserve; act of keeping from destruction, decay, or any ill.

Nature does require
Her times of preservation, which, perforce,
I give my tendance to. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.

The eyes of the Lord are upon them that love him, he is their mighty protection, a preservation from stumbling, and a help from falling. Ecclesiast. xxxiv. 16.

Ev'ry senseless thing, by nature's light,
Doth preservation seek, destruction shun.
Our allwise maker has put into man the uneasiness of hunger, thirst, and other natural desires, to determine their wills for the preservation of themselves, and the continuation of their species. Lake.

PRESERVATIVE. n. f. [præservativus, Fr. from præserve.] That which has the power of preserving; something preventive; something that confers security.

If we think that the church needeth not those ancient pre-servatives, which ages before us were glad to use, we deceive ourselves. Hooker.

It hath been anciently in use to wear tablets of arsenick, as preservatives against the plague; for that being poisons themselves, they draw the venom to them from the spirits. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Were there truth herein, it were the best preservative for princes, and persons exalted unto such fears. Brown.

Bodies kept clean, which use preservatives, are likely to escape infection. Harvey.

The most effectual preservative of our virtue, is to avoid the conversation of wicked men.

Molly is an Egyptian plant, and was really made use of as a preservative against enchantment. Bacon's Notes on Odyss.

To PRESERVE. v. a. [præserve, low Latin; præserve, Fr.]

1. To save; to defend from destruction or any evil; to keep.

The Lord shall deliver me from every evil work, and preserve me unto his heavenly kingdom. 2 Tim. iv. 18.
God sent me to preserve you a posterity, and I have your lives. Gen. xlv. 7.

She shall lead me soberly in my doings, and preserve me in her power. Wisdom ix. 11.

He did too frequently gratify their unjustifiable designs, a guilt all men, who are obnoxious, are liable to, and can hardly preserve themselves from. Clarendon.

We can preserve unhurt our minds.

To be indifferent, which of two opinions is true, is the right temper of the mind, that preserves it from being impelled on, till it has done its best to find the truth. Lake.

Every petty prince in Germany must be intreated to preserve the queen of Great Britain upon her throne. Swift.

a good preserve. Mortimer.

PRESERVER. n. f. [from præserve.]

1. One who preserves; one who keeps from ruin or mischief.

Sit, my preserver, by thy patient's side. Shakespeare.

To be always thinking, perhaps, is the privilege of the infinite author and preserver of things, who never slumbers nor sleeps; but is not competent to any finite being. Locke.

Andrew Doria has a statue erected to him, with the glorious title of deliverer of the commonwealth; and one of his family another, that calls him its preserver. Addison.

2. He who makes preserves of fruit.

To PRESIDE. v. n. [from præsides, Lat. presider, Fr.] To be set over; to have authority over.

Some o'er the public magazines preside,
And some are sent new forage to provide. Dryden.

O'er the plans
Of thriving peace, thy thoughtful fires preside. Thomson.

PRESIDENCY. n. f. [presidency, Fr. from præsident.] Superintendence.

Painfully forth, as if it press'd her heart. Shakespeare.

3. To constrain; to compel; to urge by necessity.

The experience of his goodness in her own deliverance, might cause her merciful disposition to take so much the more delight in saving others, whom the like necessity should press. Hooker.

The posts that rode upon mules and camels, went out, being hastened and pressed on by the king's commands. Elsher.

I was press'd by his majesty's commands, to assist at the treaty. Temple's Miscel.

He gapes, and straight
With hunger press'd, devours the pleasing bait. Dryden.

He pressed a letter upon me, within this hour, to deliver to you. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

4. To drive by violence.

Come with words as medical as true,
Honest as either, to purge him of that humour
That presses him from sleep. Shakespeare.

5. To affect strongly.

Paul was pressed in spirit, and testified to the Jews that Jesus was Christ. Acts xviii. 5.

Wickedness condemned by her own witness, and pressed with conscience, forecalleth grievous things. Wisdom xvii. 11.

6. To enforce; to inculcate with argument or importunity.

Be sure to press upon him every motive. Addison.

I am the more bold to press it upon you, because these accomplishments fit more handsomely on persons of quality, than any other. Felton on the Classics.

I will buy it of thee at a price; neither will I offer burnt-offerings unto the Lord my God, of that which cost me nothing.

2. From that which hath its price in composition, if you take away any thing, or any part do fail, all is disgrace.

If fortune has a niggard been to thee,

Devote thyself to thrift, not luxury;

And wisely make that kind of food thy choice,

To which necessity confines thy price.

3. Value; estimation; supposed excellence.

We stand in some jealousy, left by thus overvaluing their sermons; they make the price and estimation of scripture, otherwise notified, to fall.

4. Rate at which any thing is sold.

Supposing the quantity of wheat, in respect to its vent be the same, that makes the change in the price of wheat.

5. Reward; thing purchased at any rate.

Sometimes virtue starves, while vice is fed;

What then? is the reward of virtue bread?

That, vice may merit; 'tis the price of toil;

The knave deserves it, when he tills the soil.

To PRICE, v. a. To pay for.

Some shall pay the price of others guilt;

And he the man that made false joy to fall,

Shall with his own blood price that he hath spilt.

the priest and Levites. Peasam.

I here pray's I thy priest before thee bring.

2. One of the second order in the hierarchy, above a deacon, below a bishop.

No neighbours, but a few poor simple clowns,

Honest and true, with a well-meaning priest. Rowe.

PRIESTCRAFT. n. f. [from priest and craft.] Religious frauds;

management of wicked priests to gain power.

Puzzle has half a dozen common-place topics; though the debate be about Doway, his discourse runs upon bigotry and priestcraft. Spektator.

From priestcraft happily set free,

Lo! ev'ry finis'd son returns to thee. Pope.

PRIESTRESS. n. f. [from priest.] A woman who officiated in heaven rites.

Then too, our mighty sire, thou flood'dst difarm'd,

When thy rapt soul the lovely priestess charm'd,

That Rome's high founder bore. Addison.

These two, being the sons of a lady who was priestess to Juno, drew their mother's chariot to the temple. Spektator.

She as priestess knows the rites,

Wherein the God of earth delights. Swift's Miscel.

Th' inferior priestess, at her altar's side,

Trembling, begins the sacred rites of pride. Pope.

PRIESTHOOD. n. f. [from priest.]

1. The office and character of a priest.

vern'd by priests.

Such a cant of high-church and persecution, and being priestridden. Swift.

TO PRIEVE for prove. Spenser.

PRIG. n. f. [A cant word derived perhaps from prick, as he pricks up, he is pert; or from prickeared, an epithet of reproach bestowed upon the presbyterian teachers.] A pert, conceited, saucy, pragmatical, little fellow.

The little man concluded, with calling monsieur Mefnager an insignificant prig. Spektator, N<sup>o</sup> 482.

There have I seen some active prig,

To shew his parts, bestride a twig. Swift's Miscel.

PRILL. n. f. A birt or turbot. Ainsworth.

PRIM. adj. [by contraction from primitive.] Formal; precise;

affectedly nice.

A ball of new dropt horse's dung,

Mingling with apples in the throng,

Said to the pippin, plump and prim,

See, brother, how we apples swim. Swift's Miscel.

TO PRIM. v. a. [from the adjective.] To deck up precisely;

to form to an affected nicety.

PRIMACY. n. f. [from primat, primace, Fr. primatus, Lat.] The chief ecclesiastical station.

he should be to blame if he did not apply remedies. Clarend.

PRIMAGE. n. f. The freight of a ship. Ainsworth.

PRIMAL. adj. [from primus, Lat.] First. A word not in use, but very commodious for poetry.

It hath been taught us from the primal state,

That he, which is, was with'd, until he were. Shakep.

Oh! my offence is rank, it smells to heav'n,

It hath the primal, eldest curse upon't. Shakep.

PRIMARILY. adv. [from primary.] Originally; in the first intention; in the first place.

In fevers, where the heart primarily suffereth, we apply medicines unto the wrists. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PRI

These considerations so exactly suiting the parable of the wedding-supper to this spiritual banquet of the gospel, if it does not primarily, and in its first design, intend it; yet certainly it may, with greater advantage of resemblance, be applied to it, than to any other duty.

PRIMARINESS. n. f. [from primary.] The state of being first in act or intention.

That which is peculiar, must be taken from the primari-

ness and secondariness of the perception. Norris.

PRIMARY. adj. [from primarius, Lat.]

1. First in intention.

The figurative notation of this word, and not the primary or literal, belongs to this place. Hammond.

2. Original; first.

Before that beginning, there was neither primary matter to be informed, nor form to inform, nor any being but the eternal. Raleigh's History of the World.

When the ruins both primary and secondary were settled, the waters of the abyss began to settle too. Burnet.

These I call original or primary qualities of body, which produce simple ideas in us, viz. solidity, extension, figure and motion. Locke.

3. First in dignity; chief; principal.

As the six primary planets revolve about him, so the secondary ones are moved about them in the same unequal proportion of their periodical motions to their orbs. Bentley.

PRIMATE. n. f. [from primas, Fr. primas, Lat.] The chief ecclesiastick.

When the power of the church was first established, the archbishops of Canterbury and York had then no preheminence one over the other; the former being primate over the Southern, as the latter was over the Northern parts. Ayliffe.

The late and present primates, and the lord archbishop of Dublin hath left memorials of his bounty. Swift.

PRIMATESHIP. n. f. [from primate.] The dignity or office of a primate.

PRIME. n. f. [from primus, Lat.]

1. The first part of the day; the dawn; the morning.

His larum bell might loud and wide be heard

When cause requir'd, but never out of time, Spenser.

Early and late it rung at evening and at prime.

Sure pledge of day, that crown'd the smiling morn

With thy bright circle, praise him in thy sphere

While day arises, that sweet hour of prime. Milton.

2. The beginning; the early days.

Quickly sundry arts mechanical were found out in the very prime of the world. Hooker, b. i. f. 10.

Nature here wanton'd as in her prime. Milton.

3. The best part.

Give no more to ev'ry guest,

Than he's able to digest,

Give him always of the prime,

And but little at a time. Swift.

4. The spring of life; the height of health, strength or beauty.

Make haste, sweet love, whilst it is prime,

For none can call again the passed time. Spenser.

Will the yet debate her eyes on me,

That crop the golden prime of this sweet prince,

And made her widow to a woful bed? Shakep. Rich. III.

Youth, beauty, wisdom, courage, virtue, all

That happiness and prime can happy call. Shakep.

Likeliest she seem'd to Ceres in her prime. Milton.

No poet ever sweetly sung,

Unless he were, like Phœbus, young;

Nor ever nymph inspir'd to rhyme,

Unless, like Venus, in her prime. Swift.

Short were her marriage joys; for in the prime

Of youth, her lord expir'd before his time. Dryden.

5. Spring.

Hope waits upon the flow'ry prime,

And summer, though it be less gay,

Yet is not look'd on as a time

Of declination or decay. Waller.

The poet and his theme in spite of time,

For ever young enjoys an endless prime. Granville.

6. The height of perfection.

The plants which now appear in the most different seasons, would have been all in prime, and flourishing together at the same time. Woodward.

7. The first canonical hour.

8. The first part; the beginning; as, the prime of the moon.

PRIME. adj. [from primus, Lat.]

1. Early; blooming.

His hazy helm unbuckl'd, shew'd him prime

In manhood, where youth ended. Milton's Par. Lost.

2. Principal; first rate.

Dividers of prime quality, in several counties, were, for refusing to pay the same, committed to prison. Clarendon.

Nor can I think, that God will so destroy

We his prime creatures dignify'd so high. Milton.

Humility and resignation are our prime virtues. Dryden.

3. First; original.

We smother'd

The most replenish'd sweet work of nature,

That from the prime creation e'er she fram'd. Shakep.

Moses being chosen by God to be the ruler of his people, will not prove that priesthood belonged to Adam's heirs, or the prime fathers. Locke.

4. Excellent. It may, in this loose sense, perhaps admit, though scarcely with propriety, a superlative.

We are contented with

Catharine our queen, before the primest creature

That's paragon'd i' th' world. Shakep. Henry VIII.

TO PRIME. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put in the first powder; to put powder in the pan of a gun.

A pistol of about a foot in length, we primed with well-dried gunpowder. Boyle.

Prime all your firelocks, fasten well the stake. Gay.

His friendship was exactly tim'd,

He shot before your foes were prim'd. Swift's Miscel.

2. [Primer, Fr. to begin.] To lay the first colours on in painting. A Gallicism.

PRIMELY. adv. [from prime.]

1. Originally; primarily; in the first place; in the first intention.

Words signify not immediately and primely things themselves, but the conceptions of the mind about them. South.

2. Excellently; supremely well. A low sense.

PRIMENESS. n. f. [from prime.]

1. The state of being first.

2. Excellence.

PRIMER. n. f.

1. An office of the blessed Virgin.

Another prayer to her is not only in the manual, but in the primer or office of the blessed Virgin. Stillingfleet.

2. [Primerius, Lat.] A small prayer book in which children are taught to read, so named from the Romish book of devotions; an elementary book.

The Lord's prayer, the creed and ten commandments

he should learn by heart, not by reading them himself in his primer, but by somebody's repeating them before he can read. Locke on Education.

PRIMEIRO. n. f. [Spanish.] A game at cards.

With the duke of Suffolk. Shakep. Henry VIII.

PRIMEVAL. adj. [from primævus, Lat.] Original; such as was

The princely hierarch left his pow'rs to seize Possession of the garden. Milton.
I expressed her commands
To mighty lords and princely dames. Waller.
So fled the dame, and o'er the ocean bore
Her princely burthen to the Gallick shore. Waller.
3. Becoming a prince; royal; grand; august.
I, that but now refus'd most princely gifts,
Am bound to beg of my lord general.
Princely counsel in his face yet shone.
Born to command, your princely virtues slept
Like humble David's, while the flock he kept. Waller.
PRINCELY. adv. [from prince.] In a princelike manner.
PRINCES-FEATHER. n. f. The herb amaranth. Ainsl.
PRINCESS. n. f. [from prince, Fr.]
1. A sovereign lady; a woman having sovereign command.
Ask why God's anointed he revild;
A king and prince's dead. Dryden.
Prince's ador'd and lov'd, if verse can give A deathless name, thine shall for ever live. Gravill.
Under to excellent a prince's as the present queen, we suppose a family strictly regulated. Swift.
2. A sovereign lady of rank, next to that of a queen.
3. The daughter of a king.
Here the bracelet of the truest prince's, Shakep. Cymbeline.
4. The wife of a prince; as, the prince's of Wales.
PRINCIPAL. adj. [from prince, Fr. principalis, Lat.]
1. Princely. A fence found only in Spenser. A Latinism.
Suspicion of friend, nor fear of foe,
That hazarded his health, had he at all;
But walk'd at will, and wandred to and fro,
In the pride of his freedom principal. Spenser.
2. Chief; of the first rate; capital; essential; important; considerable.
This later is ordered, partly and as touching principal matters by none but precepts divine only; partly and as concerning things of inferior regard by ordinances, as well human as divine. Hooker, b. v. f. 4.
Can you remember any of the principal evils, that he laid to the charge of women. Shakep. As You like it.
PRINCIPAL. n. f. [from the adj.]
1. A head; a chief; not a second.
Seconds in factions do many times, when the faction sub-divideth, prove principals. Bacon.
2. One primarily or originally engaged; not an accessory or auxiliary.
We were not principals, but auxiliaries in the war. Swift.
In judgments, some persons are present as principals, and others only as accessories. Ayliffe's Parergon.
3. A capital fund placed out at interest.
Thou wilt not only loose the forfeiture,
But touch'd with human gentleness and love,
Forgive a moiety of the principal. Shakep.
Taxes must be continued, because we have no other means for paying off the principal. Swift's Miscellanies.
4. The president or governor.
PRINCIPALITY. n. f. [from prince, Fr.]
1. Sovereignty; supreme power.
Divine lady, who have wrought such miracles in me, as to make a prince none of the basest, to think all principalities base, in respect of the sheephook. Sidney, b. ii.
Nothing was given to Henry, but the name of king; all other absolute power of principality he had. Spenser.
2. A prince; one invested with sovereignty.
Then speak the truth by her; if not divine,
Yet let her be a principality.
Sov'reign to all the creatures on the earth. Shakep.
Nisroch of principalities the prime. Milton.
3. The country which gives title to a prince; as, the principality of Wales.
To the boy Caesar fend this grizzled head,
And he will fill thy wishes to the brim
With principalities. Shakep. Ant. and Cleop.
The little principality of Epire was invincible by the whole power of the Turks. Temple's Miscellanies.
4. Superiority; predominance.
In the chief work of elements, water hath the principality and excels over earth. Digby on Bodies.
If any mystery be effective of spiritual blessings, then this is much more, as having the prerogative and principality above every thing else. Taylor's Worth Communicant.
PRINCIPALLY. adv. [from principal.] Chiefly; above all;
above the rest.
If the minister of divine offices shall take upon him that holly calling for covetous or ambitious ends, or shall not design the glory of God principally, he polluteth his heart. Tayl.
They wholly mistake the nature of criticism, who think its business is principally to find fault. Dryden.
The reffiance of water arises principally from the vis inertia of its matter, and by consequence, if the heavens were as dense as water, they would not have much less resistance than water. Newton's Opticks.

What I principally insist on, is due execution. Swift.
PRINCIPALNESS. n. f. [from principal.] The state of being principal or chief.
PRINCIPATION. n. f. [from principium, Lat.] Analysis into constituent or elemental parts. A word not received.
The separating of any metal into its original or element, we will call principiation. Bacon.
PRINCIPLE. n. f. [from principium, Lat. principle, Fr.]
1. Element; constituent part; primordial substance.
Modern philosophers suppose matter to be one simple principle, or solid extension diversified by its various shapes. Watts.
2. Original cause.
Some few, whose lamp shone brighter, have been led,
From cause to cause to nature's secret head,
And found that one first principle must be. Dryden.
For the performance of this, a vital or directive principle seemeth to be assitant to the corporeal. Greul's Cognal.
3. Being productive of other being; operative cause.
The soul of man is an active principle, and will be employed one way or other. Tillasson's Sermons.
4. Fundamental truth; original postulate; first position from which others are deduced.
Touching the law of reason, there are in it some things which stand as principles universally agreed upon; and out of those principles, which are in themselves evident, the greatest moral duties we owe towards God or man, may, without any great difficulty, be concluded. Hesker.
All of them may be called principles, when compared with a thousand other judgments, which we form under the regulation of these primary propositions. Watts's Logic.
5. Ground of action; motive.
Farewel, young lords; these warlike principles
Do not throw from you
As no principle of vanity led me first to write it, so much less does any such motive induce me now to publish it. Watts.
There would be but small improvements in the world, were there not some common principle of action, working equally with all men. Addison's Spectator, N° 255.
6. Tenet on which morality is founded.
I'll try
If yet I can subdue those stubborn principles Of faith, of honour. Addison's Cato.
A feather shooting from another's head,
Extracts his brain, and principle is fled. Pope.
TO PRINCIPLE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To establish or fix in any tenet; to impress with any tenet good or ill.
Wise and best men full oft beguill'd,
With goodness principle'd not to reject
The penitent, but ever to forgive,
Are drawn to wear out miserable days. Milton.
It is the concern of his majesty, and the peace of his government, that the youth be principle'd with a thorough persuasion of the justness of the old king's cause. South.
There are so many young persons, upon the well and ill principles of whom next under God, depends the happiness or misery of this church and state. South's Sermons.
Governors should be well principle'd and good-natured. L'Estr.
Men have been principle'd with an opinion, that they must not consult reason in things of religion.
Let an enthusiast be principle'd, that he or his teacher is inspired, and you in vain bring the evidence of clear reasons against his doctrine. Locke.
He seems a settled and principle'd philosopher, thanking fortune for the tranquility he has by her aversion. Pope to Swift.
2. To establish firmly in the mind.
The promiscuous reading of the bible is far from being of any advantage to children, either for the perfecting their reading, or principleing their religion. Locke.
PRINCOCK. n. f. [from prink or prim cock; perhaps prince or PRINCOX. } præcox ingenium, Lat.] A coxcomb; a conceited person; a pert young rogue.
You are a saucy boy;
This trick may chance to icathe you I know what;
You must contrary me! you are a princex, go. Shakep.
TO PRINK. v. n. [from prinken, Dutch.] To prank; to deck for show.
Hold a good wager she was every day longer princking in the glass than you was. Art of Tormenting.
TO PRINT. v. a. [from primer, empreint, Fr.]
1. To mark by pressing any thing upon another.
On his fiery feed betimes he rode,
That scarcely prints the turf on which he trod. Dryden.
2. To form by impression.
Your mother was most true to wedlock, prince,
For she did print your royal father off. Shakep. Winter's Tale.
Conceiving you.
Ye shall not make any cuttings in your flesh for the dead,
Ye shall not print any marks upon you. Lev. ix. 23.
Perhaps some footleaps printed in the clay,
Will to my love direct your wand'ring way. Reverend.

His royal bounty brought its own reward,
And in their minds so deep did print the fence,
That if their ruins sadly they regard, Dryden.
'Tis but with fear.
4. To impress words or make books, not by the pen, but the press.
Thou hast caused printing to be used; and, contrary to the king, his crown and dignity, built a paper-mill. Shakep.
This nonsense got in by a mistake of the stage editors, who printed from the piecemeal written parts. Pope.
Is it probable, that a promiscuous jumble of printing letter should often fall into a method, which should stamp on paper a coherent discourse. Locke.
As soon as he begins to spell, pictures of animals should be got him, with the printed names to them. Locke.
TO PRINT. v. n. To publish a book.
From the moment he prints, he must expect to hear no more truth. Pope.
PRINT. n. f. [from empreint, Fr.]
1. Mark or form made by impression.
Some more time
Must wear the print of his remembrance out. Shakep.
Which any print of goodness will not take,
Being capable of all ill! Shakep. Tempest.
Attend the foot,
That leaves the print of blood where'er it walks. Shakep.
Up they tost the sand,
No wheel seen, nor wheels print was in the mould impress'd Behind them. Chapman's Iliad.
Our life so fast away doth slide,
As doth an hungry eagle through the wind;
Or as a ship transported with the tide,
Which in their passage leave no print behind.
My life is but a wind,
Which passeth by, and leaves no print behind.
O'er the smooth enamell'd green,
Where no print of step hath been. Milton.
While the heav'n, by the sun's team untrod,
Hath took no print of the approaching light,
And all the fringed host keep watch.
Before the lion's den appeared the footsteps of many that had gone in, but no prints of any that ever came out. South.
Winds bear me to some barren island,
Where print of human feet was never seen. Dryden.
From hence Astrea took her flight, and here
The prints of her departing steps appear.
If they be not sometimes renewed by repeated exercise of the senses or reflection, the print wears out. Locke.
2. That which being impressed leaves its form.
3. Pictures cut in wood or copper to be impressed on paper. It is usual to lay wooden prints and copper plates.
4. Picture made by impression.
From my breast I cannot tear
The passion, which from thence did grow;
Nor yet out of my fancy raise
The print of that supposed face. Waller.
The prints, which we see of antiquities, may contribute to form our genius, and to give us great ideas. Dryden.
Words standing for things, should be expressed by little draughts and prints made of them. Locke.
5. The form, size, arrangement, or other qualities of the types used in printing books.
To refresh the former hint;
She read her maker in a fairer print. Dryden.
6. The state of being published by the printer.
I love a ballad in print, or a life. Shakep.
It is so rare to see
Ought that belongs to young nobility
In print, that we must praise.
His natural antipathy to a man, who endeavours to signalize his parts in the world, has hindered many persons from making their appearance in print. Addison.
A published some tables, which were out of print. Arbut.
The rights of the christian church are scornfully trampled on in print. Atterbury.
7. Single sheet printed and sold.
The prints, about three days after, were filled with the same terms.
The publick had said before, that they were dull; and they were at great pains to purchase room in the prints; to testify under their hands the truth of it. Pope.
Inform us, will the emperor treat,
Or do the prints and papers lie? Pope.
8. Formal method.
Lay his head sometimes higher, sometimes lower, that he may not feel every little change, who is not designed to have his mind lay all things in print, and tuck him in warm. Locke.
PRINT. n. f. [from print.]
1. One that prints books.
I find, at reading all over, to deliver to the printer, in that which I ought to have done to comply with my design, I am fallen very short. Digby.

To buy books, only because they were published by an eminent printer, is much as if a man should buy cloaths that did not fit him, only because made by some famous taylor. Pope.
See, the printer's boy below;
Ye hawkers all, your voices lift. Swift.
2. One that stains linen.
PRI'NTLESS. adj. [from print.] That which leaves no impression.
Ye elves,
And ye, that on the sands with printless foot
Do chafe the ebbing Neptune. Shakep. Tempest.
Whilt from off the waters fleet,
Thus I set my printless feet
O'er the cowslip's velvet head,
That bends not as I tread. Milton.
PRI'OR. adj. [from prior, Lat.] Former; being before something else; antecedent; anterior.
Whenever tempted to do or approve any thing contrary to the duties we are enjoined, let us reflect that we have a prior and superior obligation to the commands of Christ. Regers.
PRI'OR. n. f. [from prior, Fr.]
1. The head of a convent of monks, inferior in dignity to an abbot.
Neither they, nor any other, besides the prior of the convent, knew any thing of his name. Addison's Spectator.
2. Prior is such a person, as, in some churches, presides over others in the same churches. Ayliffe's Parergon.
PRI'ORESS. n. f. [from prior.] A lady superior of a convent of nuns.
When you have vow'd, you must not speak with men,
But in the presence of the prioress. Shakep.
The reeve, miller and cook are distinguished from each other, as much as the mincing lady prioress and the broad speaking wife of Bath. Dryden.
PRI'ORITY. n. f. [from prior, adj.]
1. The state of being first; precedence in time.
From son to son of the lady, as they should be in priority of birth. Hayward.
Men still affirm, that it killeth at a distance, that it poisoneth by the eye, and by priority of vision.
This observation may assist, in determining the dispute concerning the priority of Homer and Hesiod. Broomer.
Though he oft renew'd the fight,
And almost got priority of fight,
He ne'er could overcome her quite. Swift.
2. Precedence in place.
Follow, Cominius, we must follow you,
Right worthy your priority. Shakep.
PRI'ORSHIP. n. f. [from prior.] The state or office of
prior.
PRI'ORY. n. f. [from prior.]
1. A convent, in dignity below an abbey.
Our abbies and our priories shall pay
This expedition's charge. Shakep. King John.
2. Priories are the churches which are given to priors in titulum, or by way of title. Ayliffe's Parergon.
PRI'SAGE. n. f. [from prife.]
Pri'sage, now called butlerage, is a custom whereby the prince challenges out of every bark laden with wine, containing less than forty tuns, two tuns of wine at his price. Cowel.
PRISM. n. f. [from prisme, Fr. πρίσμα.]
A prism of glass is a glass bounded with two equal and parallel triangular ends, and three plain and well polished sides, which meet in three parallel lines, running from the three angles of one end, to the three angles of the other end.
Here, awful Newton, the dissolving clouds Form fronting, on the sun, thy showery prism. Thomson.
PRISMATICK. adj. [from prismatique, Fr. from prisma.] Formed as a prism.
If the mass of the earth was cubick, prismatick, or any other angular figure, it would follow, that one, too vast a part, would be drowned, and another be dry. Derham.
False eloquence, like the prismatick glaiss,
Its gaudy colours spreads on ev'ry place;
The face of nature we no more survey,
All glares alike, without distinction gay. Pope.
PRISMATICALLY. adv. [from prismatique.] In the form of a prism.
Take notice of the pleasing variety of colours exhibited by the triangular glaiss, and demand what addition or decrement of either salt, sulphur or mercury befalls the glaiss, by being prismatically figured; and yet it is known, that without that shape, it would not afford those colours as it does. Boyle.
PRISMOID. n. f. [from πρίσμα and ἰδῶν.] A body approaching to the form of a prism.
PRISON. n. f. [from prison, Fr.] A strong hold in which persons are confined; a goal.
He hath commissiion
To hang Cordelia in the prison. Shakep. King Lear.
I thought

- For those rebellious here their pris'n ordain'd. Milton.
 I thought our utmost good
 Was in one word of freedom understood,
 The fatal blessing came; from prison free,
 I starve abroad, and lose the sight of Emily.
 Unkind! can you, whom only I adore,
 Set open to your slave the prison door. Dryden.
 The tyrant Æolus,
 With pow'r imperial, curbs the struggling winds,
 And founding tempests in dark prisons binds. Dryden.
 He, that has his chains knocked off, and the prison doors Set open to him, is presently at liberty. Locke.
 To PRISON. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To imprison; to shut up in hold; to refrain from liberty.
 2. To captivate; to enchain.
 Culling their potent herbs and baleful drugs,
 They, as they sung, would take the prison d' soul, Milton.
 And lap it in Elysium.
 3. To confine.
 Universal plodding prisons up
 The humble spirits in the arteries. Shakefp.
 Then did the king enlarge
 The spleen he prison'd. Chapman's Iliads.
PRISONER. n. f. A kind of rural play, commonly called prisoners.
 The fancies of the court play every Friday at ciocho di canni, which is no other than prisonase upon horseback, hitting one another with darts, as the others do with their hands. Sandy's Travels.
PRISONER. n. f. [from prisonier, Fr.]
 1. One who is confined in hold.
 To whose flint bottom my condemned lord
 Is doomed a prisoner. Shakefp. Rich. II.
 The most pernicious infection, next the plague, is the smell of the jail, when prisoners have been long and close, and nastily kept. Bacon.
 He that is tied with one slender string, such as one resolute struggle would break, he is prisoner only to his own sloth, and who will pity his thraldom. Decey of Piety.
 A prisoner is troubled, that he cannot go whither he would;
 and he that is at large is troubled, that he does not know whither to go. L'Estrange.
 2. A captive; one taken by the enemy.
 So oft as homeward I from her depart,
 I go like one that having lost the field,
 Is prisoner led away with heavy heart. Spenser.
 There succeeded an absolute victory for the English, the taking of the Spanish general d'Ocampo prisoner, with the loss of few of the English. Bacon.
 He yielded on my word,
 And as my prisoner, I restore his sword. Dryden.
 3. One under an arrest.
 Tribune, a guard to seize the empress straight,
 Secure her person prisoner to the state. Dryden.
PRISONHOUSE. n. f. [Gael.; hold in which one is confined.]
 I am forbid to tell the secrets of my prisonhouse. Shakefp.
PRISONMENT. n. f. [from prison.] Confinement: imprisonment; captivity.
 May be he will not touch young Arthur's life,
 But hold himself safe in his prisonment. Shakefp.
PRISTINE. adj. [from pristinus, Lat.] First; ancient; original.
 Now their pristine worth
 The Britons recollect. Philips.
 This light being trajected only through the parallel super-ficies of the two prisms, if it suffered any change by the refraction of one superficies, it lost that impression by the contrary refraction of the other superficies, and so, being restored to its pristine constitution, became of the same nature and condition as at first. Newton's Opticks.
PRITHEE. A familiar corruption of pray thee, or I pray thee, which some of the tragick writers have injudiciously used.
 Well, what was that scream for, I prithee? L'Estrange.
 Alas! why com'st thou at this dreadful moment,
 To shock the peace of my departing soul?
 Away! I prithee leave me! Rewe's Jane Shore.
PRIVACY. n. f. [from privatus.]
 1. State of being secret; secrecy.
 2. Retirement; retreat.
 Clamorous our privacies uneasy make, Birds leave their nests disturb'd, and beasts their haunts forsake. Dryden.
 3. [From privatus, Fr.] Privacy; joint knowledge; great familiarity. Privacy in this sense is improper.
 You see Frog is religiously true to his bargain, seems to hearken to any composition without your privacy. Arbutnot.
 4. Taciturnity. Answerth.
PRIVADO. n. f. [Spanish.] A secret friend.
 The lady Brampton, an English lady, embarked for Portugal at that time, with some privado of her own. Bacon.
PRIVATE. adj. [from privatus, Lat.]
 1. Not open; secret.
 You shall go with me;
 I have some private schooling for you. Shakefp.

PRI

- Fancy retires
 Into her private cell, when nature rests. Milton.
 The harmless freedom, and the private friend. Anon.
 2. Alone; not accompanied.
 3. Being upon the same terms with the rest of the community; particular: opposed to publick.
 When publick consent of the whole hath established any thing, every man's judgment, being thereunto compared, were not private, howsoever his calling be to some kind of publick charge; so that of peace and quietness there is not any way possible, unless the probable voice of every intire society or body politic overrule all private of like nature in the same body. Hooker's Preface.
 He flies
 To let him breathe between the heavens and earth,
 A private man in Athens. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleop.
 What infinite heartsease must kings neglect,
 That private men enjoy? and what have kings,
 That private have not too, save ceremony?
 Peter was but a private man, and not to be any way compared with the dukes of his house. Peacham of Antiquities.
 The first principles of christian religion should not be feared with school points and private tenets. Sanderson.
 Dare you,
 A private man presume to love a queen. Dryden.
 4. Particular; not relating to the publick.
 My end being private, I have not expressed my conceptions in the language of the schools. Digby.
 5. In PRIVATE. Secretly; not publicly; not openly.
 In private grieve, but with a carele's scorn;
 In publick seem to triumph, not to mourn. Granville.
PRIVATE. n. f. A secret message.
 His private with me of the dauphin's love,
 Is much more general than these lines import. Shakefp.
PRIVATEER. n. f. [from privatus.] A ship fitted out by private men to plunder enemies.
 He is at no charge for a fleet, further than providing privateers, wherewith his subjects carry on a pyrrical war at their own expence.
 To PRIVATEER. v. a. [from the noun.] To fit out ships against enemies, at the charge of private persons.
PRIVATELY. adv. [from privatus.] Secretly; not openly.
 There, this night,
 We'll pass the business privately and well. Shakefp.
 And as he sat upon the mount of Olives, the disciples came unto him privately. Mat. xxiv. 3.
PRIVATENESS. n. f. [from privatus.]
 1. The state of a man in the same rank with the rest of the community.
 2. Secrecy; privacy.
 Ambassadors attending the court in great numbers, he did content with courtesy, reward and privateness. Bacon.
 3. Obscurity; retirement.
 He drew him into the fatal circle from a resolved privateness, where he bent his mind to a retired course. Watson.
PRIVATION. n. f. [from privatio, Fr. privatio, Lat.]
 1. Removal or destruction of any thing or quality.
 For, what is this contagious sin of kind,
 But a privation of that grace within. Davies.
 So bounded are our natural desires,
 That wanting all, and setting pain aside,
 With bare privation sense is satisfy'd. Dryden.
 After some account of good, evil will be known by consequence, as being only a privation or absence of good. South.
 A privation is the absence of what does naturally belong to the thing, or which ought to be present with it; as when a man or horse is deaf or dead, or a physician or divine un-learned; these are privations. Watts's Logic.
 2. The act of the mind by which, in considering a subject, we separate it from any thing appendant.
 3. The act of degrading from rank or office.
 If part of the people or estate be somewhat in the election, you cannot make them nulls or cyphers in the privati- on or translation. Bacon.
 If the privation be good, it follows not the former condition was evil, but less good; for the flower or blossom is a positive good, although the remove of it, to give place to the fruit, be a comparative good. Bacon.
PRIVATIVE. adj. [from privatus, Fr. privativus, Lat.]
 1. Causing privation of any thing.
 2. Constituting in the absence of something; not positive. Priv- ative is in things, what negative is in propositions.
 The impression from privative is to active, as from silence to noise, is a greater degree than from less noise to more. Bacon.
 The very privative blessings, the blessings of immunity, safeguard, liberty and integrity, which we enjoy, deserve the thanksgiving of a whole life. Taylor.
PRIVATIVE. n. f. That of which the essence is the absence of something, as silence is only the absence of sound.
 Harmonical sounds and discordant sounds are both active and positive, but blackness and darkness are indeed but priv- atives, and therefore have little or no activity; somewhat they do contristate, but very little. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
PRIVATIVELY.

PRI

- PRIVATIVELY*. adv. [from privative.] By the absence of something necessary to be present; negatively.
 The duty of the new covenant is set down, first privatively, not like that of Mosaic observances external, but positively, laws given into the minds and hearts. Hammond.
PRIVATINESS. n. f. [from privatus.] Notation of absence of something that should be present.
PRIVET. n. f. The leaves grow by pairs opposite to each other;
 the flower consists of one leaf, is tubulous, and divided at the top into five segments; the ovary in the center of the flower-cup becomes a globular soft fruit full of juice, in which are lodged four seeds. Miller.
PRIVET. n. f. Evergreen. It is distinguished from the phillyrea by the leaves being placed alternately upon the branches, whereas those of the phillyrea are produced by pairs opposite to each other: it hath three seeds inclosed in each berry, whereas the phillyrea has but one. Miller.
PRIVILEGE. n. f. [from privilegium, Lat.]
 1. Peculiar advantage.
 Here's my sword,
 Behold it is the privilege of mine honours,
 My oath, and my profession. Shakefp.
 He went
 Invisible, yet stay'd, such privilege Millon.
 Hath omnipotence.
 He claims his privilege, and says 'tis fit,
 Nothing should be the judge of wit, but wit. Denham.
 Smiles, not allow'd to beasts, from reason move,
 And are the privilege of human love. Dryden.
 The privilege of birth-right was a double portion. Lecker.
 2. Immunity; publick right.
 I beg the ancient privilege of Athens. Shakefp.
 A soul that can securely death defy,
 And counts it nature's privilege to die. Dryden.
 To PRIVILEGE. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To invest with rights or immunities; to grant a privilege.
 The great are privileg'd alone,
 To punish all injustice but their own. Dryden.
 He happier yet, who privileg'd by fate
 To shorter labour, and a lighter weight,
 Receiv'd but yesterday the gift of breath,
 Ordain'd to-morrow to return to death. Prior.
 2. To exempt from censure or danger.
 The court is rather deemed as a privileg'd place of unbridled licentiousness, than as the abiding of him, who, as a father, should give a fatherly example. Sidney, b. ii.
 He took this place for sanctuary,
 And it shall privilege him from your hands. Shakefp.
 This place
 Doth privilege me, speak what reason will. Daniel.
 3. To exempt from paying tax or impost.
 Many things are by our laws privileg'd from tythes, which by the canon law are chargeable. Hale.
PRIVILEGE. adv. [from privus.] Secretly; privately.
 They have the profits of their lands by pretence of conveyances thereof unto their privy friends, who privily send them the revenues. Spenser's State of Ireland.
PRIVILEGE. n. f. [from privus, Fr. from privus.]
 1. Private communication.
 I will unto you in privacy discover the drift of my purpose;
 I mean thereby to settle an eternal peace in that country, and also to make it very profitable to her majesty. Spenser.
 2. Confidentiality; joint knowledge; private concurrence.
 The authority of higher powers have force even in these things which are done without their privacy, and are of mean reckoning. Hooker, b. i. f. 7.
 Upon this French going out, took he upon him,
 Without the privacy o' th' king, t' appoint
 Who should attend him? Shakefp. Henry VIII.
 All the doors were laid open for his departure, not without the privacy of the prince of Orange, concluding that the kingdom might better be settled in his absence. Swift.
 3. [In the plural.] Secret parts.
 Few of them have any thing to cover their privities. Abbot.
PRIVY. adj. [from privus, Fr.]
 1. Private; not publick; assigned to secret uses.
 The party, 'gainst the which he doth contrive,
 Shall seize on half his goods; the other half Comes to the privy coffer of the state. Shakefp.
 2. Secret; clandestine.
 He took advantage of the night for such privy attempts, inasmuch that the bruit of his manliness was spread every where. 2 Mac. viii. 7.
 3. Secret; not shown.
 The sword of the great men that are slain entereth into their privy chamber. Ezek. xxi. 14.
 4. Admitted to secrets of state.
 The king has made him
 One of the privy council. Shakefp. Henry VIII.
 One, having let his beard grow from the martyrdom of King Charles I. till the restoration, desired to be made a privy councillor. Spektator, N° 629.

PRO

5. Confiscous to any thing; admitted to participation of knowledge.
 Sir Valentine
 This night intends to steal away your daughter;
 Myself am one made privy to the plot. Shakefp.
 Many being privy to the fact,
 How hard is it to keep it unbetray'd? Daniel.
 He would rather lose half of his kingdom, than be privy to such a secret, which he commanded me never to mention. Gulliver's Travels.
PRIVY. n. f. Place of retirement; necessary house.
 Your fancy
 Would still the same ideas give ye,
 As when you spy'd her on the privy. Swift.
PRIZE. n. f. [from pris, Fr.]
 1. A reward gained by contest with competitors.
 If ever he go alone, I'll never wrestle for prize. Shakefp.
 I fought and conquer'd, yet have lost the prize. Dryden.
 The raising such silly competitions among the ignorant, proposing prizes for such useless accomplishments, and inspiring them with such absurd ideas of superiority, has in it something immoral as well as ridiculous. Addison.
 2. A reward gained by any performance.
 True poets empty fame and praise despise,
 Fame is the trumpet, but your smile the prize. Dryden.
 3. [From pris, Fr.] Something taken by adventure; plunder.
 The king of Scots the did send to France,
 To fill king Edward's fame with prisoner kings,
 And make his chronicle as rich with prize,
 As is the ozy bottom of the sea
 With funken wreck. Shakefp. Henry V.
 He acquitted himself like a valiant, but not like an honest man; for he converted the prizes to his own use. Arbutnot.
 Then prostrate falls, and begs with ardent eyes
 Soon to obtain and long possess the prize: Pope.
 The pow'r gave ear.
 To PRIZE. v. a. [from apprais; priser, Fr. apprécier, Lat.]
 1. To rate; to value at a certain price.
 Life I prize not a straw; but for mine honour
 Which I would free. Shakefp.
 Cast it unto the potter; a goodly price that I was prized at of them. Zech. xi. 13.
 2. To esteem; to value highly.
 I go to free us both of pain;
 I prize'd your person, but your crown disdain. Dryden.
 Some the French writers, some our own despise;
 The ancients only, or the moderns prize. Pope.
PRIZER. n. f. [from priser, Fr. from prize.] He that values.
 It holds its estimate and dignity,
 As well wherein 'tis precious of itself,
 As in the prizer. Shakefp. Troilus and Cressida.
PRIZEFIGHTER. n. f. [from prize and fighter.] One that fights publicly for a reward.
 Martin and Crambe engaged like prizefighters. Arb. and Po.
 In fig the prizefighter by day delight. Branston.
PRO. [Latin.] For; in defence of; pro and con, for pro and contra, for and against. Despicable cant.
 Doctrinal points in controversy had been agitated in the pulpits, with more warmth than had used to be; and thence the animosity increased in books pro and con. Clarendon.
 Matthew met Richard, when
 Of many knotty points they spoke,
 And pro and con by turns they took. Prior.
PROBABILITY. n. f. [from probabilitas, Lat. probabilitas, Fr. from probare.] Likelihood; appearance of truth; evidence arising from the preponderation of argument: it is less than moral certainty.
 Probability is the appearance of the agreement or disagreement of two ideas, by the intervention of proofs, whose connection is not constant; but appears for the most part to be so. Locke.
 As for probabilities, what thing was there ever set down so agreeable with sound reason, but some probable thew against it might be made? Hooker's Preface.
 If a truth be certain, and thwart interest, it will quickly fetch it down to but a probability; nay, if it does not carry with it an impregnable evidence, it will go near to debate it to a downright fallacy. South's Sermons.
 Though moral certainty be sometimes taken for a high degree of probability, which can only produce a doubtful assent; yet it is also frequently used for a firm assent to a thing upon such grounds, as are fit fully to satisfy a prudent man.
 For a perpetual motion, magnetical virtues are not without some strong probabilities of proving effectual. Wilkins.
PROBABLE. adj. [from probable, Fr. probabilis, Lat.] Likely; having more evidence than the contrary.
 The publick approbation, given by the body of this whole church unto those things which are established, doth make it but probable that they are good, and therefore unto a necessary proof that they are not good it must give place. Hooker.

PRO

That is accounted probable, which has better arguments producible for it, than can be brought against it. South.
They assented to things, that were neither evident nor certain, but only probable; for they conversed, they merchandized upon a probable persuasion of the honesty and truth of those whom they corresponded with. South's Sermons.

PROBABLY, adv. [from probable.] Likely; in likelihood. Distinguish betwixt what may possibly, and what will probably be done. L'Estrange's Fables.

Our constitution in church or state could not probably have been long preserved, without such methods. Swift.

PROBATE, n. f. [Latin.] The proof of wills and testaments of persons deceased in the spiritual court, either in common form by the oath of the executor, or with witnesses. Dist.

PROBATION, n. f. [probatio, Lat. from probo, Lat. probationis, Fr.]

1. Proof; evidence; testimony.
Of the truth herein,
This present object made probation. Shakesp. Hamlet.

He was lapt in a most curious mantle, which, for more probation, I can produce. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

2. The act of proving by ratiocination or testimony.
When these principles, what is, is, and it is impossible for the same thing to be, and not to be, are made use of in the probation of propositions, wherein are words standing for complex ideas, as man or horse, there they make men receive and retain falsehood for manifest truth. Locke.

3. [Probation, Fr.] Trial; examination.
In the practical part of knowledge, much will be left to experience and probation, whereunto indication cannot so fully reach. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

4. Trial before entrance into monastic life; noviciate.
I suffer many things as an author militant, whereof, in your days of probation, you have been a sharer. Pope to Swift.

PROBATIONARY, adj. [from probation.] Serving for trial.
PROBATOR, n. f. [from probation.]

1. One who is upon trial.
Hear a mortal muse thy praise rehearse,
In no ignoble verse;
But such as thy own verse did praise here,
When thy first fruits of poetry were giv'n,
To make thyself a welcome inmate there;
While yet a young probationer,
And candidate of heav'n. Dryden.

2. A novice.
This root of bitterness was but a probationer in the soil; and though it set forth some offsets to preserve its kind, yet Satan was vain to cherish them. Decay of Piety.

PROBATIONERSHIP, n. f. [from probationer.] State of being a probationer; noviciate.
He has afforded us only the twilight of probability, suitable to that state of mediocrity and probationership, he has been pleased to place us in here, wherein to check our over-confidence. Locke.

PROBATORY, adj. [from probo, Lat.] Serving for trial.
Job's afflictions were no vindictive punishments, but probatory chastisements to make trial of his graces. Bramhall.

PROBATUM EST, A Latin expression added to the end of a receipt, signifying it is tried or proved.
Vain the concern that you express,
That uncall'd Alard will possess
Your house and coach both day and night,
And that Macbeth was haunted less
By Banquo's restless spirit:
Lend him but fifty louis d'or,
And you shall never see him more;
Take my advice probatum est?
Why do the gods indulge our store,
But to secure our rest. Prior.

PROBE, n. f. [from probo, Lat.] A slender wire by which surgeons search the depth of wounds.
I made search with a probe. Wifeman's Surgery.

PROBE-SCISSORS, n. f. [probe and scissor.] Scissors used to open wounds, of which the blade thrust into the orifice has a button at the end.
The sinus was snipt up with probe-scissors. Wifeman.

TO PROBE, v. a. [probo, Lat.] To search; to try by an instrument.
Nothing can be more painful, than to probe and search a purulent old sore to the bottom.
He'd raise a bluish, where secret vice he found;
And tickle, while he gently probed the wound. Dryden.

PROBITY, n. f. [probitas, Fr. probitas, Lat.] Honesty; sincerity; veracity.
The truth of our Lord's ascension, might be deduced from the probitas of the apostles. Fiddes's Sermons.

So near approach we their celestial kind,
By justice, truth, and probitas of mind. Pope.

PROBLEM, n. f. [problema, Fr. πρόβλημα.] A question proposed.

PRO

The problem is, whether a man constantly and strongly believing, that such a thing shall be, it doth help any thing to the effecting of the thing. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Although in general one understood colours, yet were it not an easy problem to resolve, why grass is green? Brown.

This problem let philosophers resolve.
What makes the globe from West to East revolve. Blackm.

PROBLEMATICAL, adj. [from problem; problematique, Fr.] Uncertain; unsettled; disputed; disputable.
I promised no better arguments than might be expected in a point problematical. Boyle.

Diligent enquiries into remote and problematical guilt, leave a gate wide open to the whole tribe of informers. Swift.

PROBLEMATICALLY, adv. [from problematical.] Uncertainly.
PROBOSCE, n. f. [proboscis, Lat.] A snout; the trunk of an elephant; but it is used also for the same part in every creature, that bears any resemblance thereto.

The elephant wreath'd to make them sport
His lithe proboscis. Milton.

PROCAECIOUS, adj. [procaecus, Lat.] Petulant; loofe. Dist.

PROCAECITY, n. f. [from procaecus.] Petulance. Dist.

PROCATARCTIC, adj. [προκαταρκτικός, Gr.] Forerunning; antecedent. See PROCATARXIS.

James IV. of Scotland, falling away in his procatarctic, without the precedence of any procatarctic cause, was suddenly cured by decharming the witchcraft. Harvey on Conjunctions.

The physician enquires into the procatarctic causes. Harv.

PROCATARXIS, n. f. [προκαταρξις, Gr.]

Procatarxis is the pre-existent cause of a disease, which co-operates with others that are subsequent, whether internal or external; as anger or heat of climate, which bring such an ill disposition of the juices, as occasion a fever: the ill disposition being the immediate cause, and the bad air the procatarctic cause. Quincy.

PROCEDURE, n. f. [procedure, Fr. from proceed.]

1. Manner of proceeding; management; conduct.
This is the true procedure of conscience, always supposing a law from God, before it lays obligation upon man. South.

2. Act of proceeding; progress; process; operation.
Although the distinction of these several procedures of the soul do not always appear distinct, especially in sudden actions, yet in actions of weight, all these have their distinct order and procedure. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

3. Produce; thing produced.
No known substance, but earth and the procedures of earth, as tile and stone, yieldeth any morsel or herby substance. Bacon.

TO PROCEED, v. n. [procedo, Lat. procedo, Fr.]

1. To pass from one thing or place to another.
Adam
Proceeded thus to ask his heav'nly guest. Milton.

Then to the prelude of a war proceeds;
His horns, yet fore, he tries against a tree.
I shall proceed to more complex ideas. Dryden.

2. To go forward; to tend to the end designed.
Temp'rately proceed to what you would Thus violently redress. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

These things, when they proceed not, they go backward.
Benj. Johnson's Catiline.

3. To come forth from a place or from a sender.
I proceeded forth and came from God; neither came I of myself, but he sent me. Jo. viii. 42.

4. To go or march in state.
He ask'd a clear stage for his muse to proceed in. Avon.

5. To issue; to arise; to be the effect of; to be produced from.
A dagger of the mind, a false creation Proceeding from the heat oppress'd brain. Shakesp. Macbeth.

From me what proceed
But all corrupt, both mind and will both deprav'd. Mil.

6. To prosecute any design.
All this proceeded not from any want of knowledge. Dryd.

7. To transact; to be carried on.
He will, after his four fashion tell you,
What hath proceeded worthy note to-day. Shakesp.

8. To make progress; to advance.
Violence
Proceeded, and oppression and sword law
Through all the plain. Milton.

9. To carry on juridical process.
Proceed by process, left parties break out,
And sick great Rome with Romans. Shakesp.

Instead of a ship, to levy upon his county such a sum of money for his majesty's use, with direction in what manner he should proceed against such as refused. Clarendon.

10. To transact; to act; to carry on any affair methodically.
From them I will not hide
My judgments, how with mankind I proceed;
As how with peccant angels late they law. Milton.

Follow'd in bright procession. Milton.

PRO

How feverently with themselves proceed,
The men who write such verse as who can read?
Their own strict judges, not a word they spare,
That wants or force, or light, or weight, or care. Pope.

11. To take effect; to have its course.
This rule only proceeds and takes place, when a person cannot of common law condemn another by his sentence. Ayliffe.

12. To be propagated; to come by generation.
From my loins thou shalt proceed. Milton.

13. To be produced by the original efficient cause.
O Adam, one Almighty is, from whom
All things proceed, and up to him return. Milton.

PROCEED, n. f. [from the verb.] Produce: as, the proceeds of an estate. Clarissa. Not an imitable word, though much used in law writings.

PROCEEDER, n. f. [from proceed.] One who goes forward; one who makes a progress.
He that seeketh victory over his nature, let him not let himself too great nor too small tasks; for the first will make him dejected by often failing; and the second will make him a small proceeder, though by often prevailings. Bacon.

PROCEEDING, n. f. [proceed, Fr. from proceed.]

1. Progress from one thing to another; series of conduct; transaction.
I'll acquaint our duteous citizens,
With all your just proceedings in this case. Shakesp.

2. To your proceedings bids me tell you this. Shakesp.
The understanding brought to knowledge by degrees, and, in such a general proceeding, nothing is hard. Locke.

It is a very unusual proceeding, and I would not have been guilty of it for the world. Arbutnot's Hist. of J. Bull.

From the earliest ages of christianity, there never was a precedent of such a proceeding. Swift.

2. Legal procedure: as, such are the proceedings at law.
PROCELOUS, adj. [procellosus, Lat.] Tempestuous. Dist.

PROCEPTION, n. f. Preconception; act of taking something sooner than another. A word not in use.
Having so little power to offend others, that I have none to preserve what is mine own from their preception. King Charles.

PROCEURER, n. f. [from procurer, Lat.] Talens; height of stature.
We shall make attempts to lengthen out the humane figure, and restore it to its ancient procurer. Addison.

PROCESS, n. f. [processus, Fr. processus, Latin.]

1. Tendency; progressive course.
That there is somewhat higher than either of these two, no other proof doth need, than the very process of man's desire, which being natural should be frustrate, if there were not some farther thing wherein it might rest at the length contented, which in the former it cannot do. Hooker.

2. Regular and gradual progress.
Commend me to your honourable wife;
Tell her the process of Antonio's end;
Say how I lov'd you; speak me fair in death. Shakesp.

They declared unto him the whole process of that war, and with what success they had endured. Kneller.

Immediate are the acts of God, more swift
Than time or motion; but to human ears
Cannot without process of speech be told. Milton.

Attends the fatal process of the war. Dryden.

In the parable of the wasteful steward, we have a lively image of the force and process of this temptation. Rogers.

3. Course; continual flux or passage.
I have been your wife, in this obedience,
Upward of twenty years; if in the course
And process of this time you can report,
And prove it too against mine honour aught, Turn me away. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

This neither empire rise,
By policy and long process of time. Milton.

Many acts of parliament have, in long process of time, been lost, and the things forgotten. Hale's Law of England.

4. Methodical management of any thing.
Experiments, familiar to chymists, are unknown to the learned, who never read chymical process. Boyle.

From all the labour, process, clamour, woe,
Which our sad scenes of daily action know. Prior.

5. Course of law.
Proceed by process,
Left parties, as he is belov'd, break out. Shakesp.

All processes ecclesiastical should be made in the king's name, as in writs at the common law. Heywood.

The patricians they chose for their patrons, to answer for their appearance, and defend them in any process. Swift.

PROCESSION, n. f. [processio, Fr. processus, Lat.] A train marching in ceremonious solemnity.
If there be cause for the church to go forth in solemn procession, his whole family have such business come upon them, that no one can be spared. Hooker.

Follow'd in bright procession. Milton.

PRO

'Tis the procession of a funeral vow,
Which cruel laws to Indian wives allow. Dryden.

The priests, Pontius at their head,
In skins of beasts involv'd, the long procession led. Dryden.

When this vast congregation was formed into a regular procession to attend the ark of the covenant, the king marched at the head of his people, with hymns and dances. Addison.

It is to be hoped, that the persons of wealth, who made their procession through the members of these new erected seminaries, will contribute to their maintenance. Addison.

The Ethiopians held an annual sacrifice of twelve days to the Gods; all that time they carried their images in procession, and placed them at their festivals. Brown.

TO PROCESSION, v. n. [from the noun.] To go in procession.
A low word.

PROCESSIONAL, adj. [from procession.] Relating to procession.

PROCESSIONARY, adj. [from procession.] Consisting in procession.
Rogations or litanies were then the very strength and comfort of God's church; whereupon, in the year 506, it was by the council of Aurelia decreed, that the whole church should bestow yearly at the feast of pentecost, three days in that processionary service. Hooker.

PROCHRONISM, n. f. [πρόχρονισμος, Gr.] An error in chronology; a dating a thing before it happened. Dist.

PROCIDENCE, n. f. [procidencia, Lat.] Falling down; dependence below its natural place.

PROCLINCT, n. f. [proclinctus, Lat.] Complete preparation; preparation brought to the point of action.
When all the plain
Cover'd with thick imbarr'd squadrons bright,
Chariots, and flaming arms, and fiery steeds,

I proclaim a liberty for you, faith the Lord, to the sword and to the pestilence. Jer. xxxiv. 17.

2. To tell openly.
Some profligate wretches, were the apprehensions of punishments or shame taken away, would as openly proclaim their atheism, as their lives do. Locke.

3. To outlaw by publick denunciation.
I heard myself proclaimed. Prior.

PROCLAIMER, n. f. [from proclaim.] One that publishes by authority.
The great proclaimers, with a voice
More awful than the sound of trumpet, cry'd
Repentance, and heaven's kingdom nigh at hand
To all baptiz'd. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.

PROCLAMATION, n. f. [proclamatio, Lat. proclamation, Fr. from proclaim.]

1. Publication by authority,
2. A declaration of the king's will openly published among the people.
If the king sent a proclamation for their repair to their houses, some nobleman published a protestation against those proclamations. Clarendon.

PROCLIVITY, n. f. [proclivitas, proclivis, Lat.]

1. Tendency; natural inclination; propension; proneness.
The sensitive appetite may engender a proclivity to steal, but not a necessity to steal. Branball against Hobbs.

2. Readiness; facility of attaining.
He had such a dextrous proclivity, as his teachers were fain to restrain his forwardness, that his brothers might keep pace with him. Wotton.

PROCLIVOUS, adj. [proclivus, Lat.] Inclined; tending by nature. Dist.

PROCONSUL, n. f. [Latin.] A Roman officer, who governed a province with consular authority.

PROCONSULSHIP, n. f. [from proconsul.] The office of a proconsul.

TO PROCRASTINATE, v. a. [procrastino, Lat.] To defer; to delay; to put off from day to day.
Hopeless and helpless doth Procrastinate his lifeless end. Shakesp.

Let

PRO

Let men seriously and attentively listen to that voice within them, and they will certainly need no other medium to convince them, either of the error or danger of thus procrastinating their repentance. Decay of Piety.

TO PROCRASTINATE. v. n. To be dilatory.

I procrastinate more than I did twenty years ago, and have several things to finish, which I put off to twenty years hence. Swift to Pope.

PROCRASTINATION. n. f. [procrastinatio, Lat. from procrastinatus.] Delay; dilatoriness.

How desperate the hazard of such procrastination is, hath been convincingly demonstrated by better pens. D. of Piety.

PROCRASTINATOR. n. f. [from procrastinatus.] A dilatory person.

PROCREANT. adj. [procreans, Lat.] Productive; pregnant.

The temple haunting martlet, does approve
By his lov'd mansion; that heaven's breath Smells woollily here: no jutting frieze,
But this bird

Hath made his pendant bed, and procreant cradle. Shaksp.

TO PROCREATE. v. a. [procreo, Lat. procreo, Fr.] To generate; to produce.

Flies crufted and corrupted, when inclosed in such vessels, did never procreate a new fly. Bentley.

Since the earth retains her fruitful power,
Say, why to nobler animals alone
Should she be feeble, and unfruitful grown. Blackmore.

PROCREATION. n. f. [procreation, Fr. procreatio, Lat. from procreo.] Generation; production.

The enclosed warmth, which the earth hath in itself, stirred up by the heat of the sun, assisteth nature in the speedier procreation of those varieties, which the earth bringeth forth. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

Neither her outside form'd to fair, nor ought In procreation common to all kinds. Milton's Par. Lost.

PRODIGAL. adj. [prodigus, Lat. prodigus, Fr.] Profuse; wasteful; expensive; lavish; not frugal; not parsimonious.

Least I should seem over prodigal in the praise of my countrymen, I will only present you with some few verses. Camd.

Be now as prodigal of all dear grace,
As nature was in making graces dear,
When she did starve the general world beside,
And prodigally gave them all to you. Shaksp.

My chief care
Is to come fairly off from the great debts,
Wherein my time, something too prodigal,
Hath left me gagged. Shaksp. Merch. of Venice.

Diogenes did beg more of a prodigal man than the rest; whereupon one said, see your baseness, that when you find a liberal mind, you take most of him; no, said Diogenes, but I mean to beg of the rest again. Bacon.

As a hero, whom his baser foes
In troops surround; now these affairs, now those,
Though prodigal of life, disdains to die
By common hands. Denham.

Here patrician live, who for their country's good,
In fighting fields were prodigal of blood. Dryden.

The prodigal of soul rush'd on the stroke
Of lifted weapons, and did wounds provoke. Dryden.

O! beware,
Great warrior, nor too prodigal of life,
Expose the British safety. Philips.

Some people are prodigal of their blood, and others so sparing, as if so much life and blood went together. Baker.

PRODIGAL. n. f. A waster; a spendthrift.

A beggar suddenly grown rich, becomes a prodigal; for to obscure his former obscurity, he puts on riot and excess. Benj. Johnson's Discovery.

Your parents did not produce you much into the world, whereby you avoided many wrong steps. Swift.

3. To bring as an evidence.

It seems not meet, nor wholesome to my place,
To be produc'd against the Moor. Shaksp. Othello.

4. To bear; to bring forth, as a vegetable.

This soil produces all sorts of palm-trees. Sandys.

5. To cause; to effect; to generate; to beget.

Somewhat is produced of nothing; for lyes are sufficient to breed opinion, and opinion brings on substance. Bacon.

They by imprudence mix'd Produce prodigious births of body or mind. Milton.

Thou all this good of evil shalt produce. Milton.

Clouds may rain, and rain produce Fruits in her loften'd soil. Milton.

PRO

Observing in ourselves, that we can at pleasure move several parts of our bodies; the effects also, that natural bodies are able to produce in one another, occurring every moment to our senses, we both these ways get the idea of power. Locke.

Hinder light but from striking on porphyre, and its colours vanish, it no longer produces any such ideas; upon the return of light, it produces these appearances again. Locke.

This wonder of the sculptor's hand
Produce'd, his art was at a stand. Addison.

PRODUCE. n. f. [from the verb.] This noun, though accented on the last syllable by Dryden, is generally accented on the former.]

1. Produce; that which any thing yields or brings.

You hoard not health for your own private use,
But on the publick spend the rich produce. Dryden.

2. Amount; profit; gain; emergent sum or quantity.

In Staffordshire, after their lands are marled, they sow it with barley, allowing three bushels to an acre. Its common produce is thirty bushels. Mortimer's Husbandry.

This tax has already been so often tried, that we know the exact produce of it. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup> 20.

PRODUCE. n. f. [from produce.] One that exhibits; one that offers.

If an instrument be produced with a protestation in favour of the producer, and the adverse party does not contradict, it shall be construed to the advantage of the producer. Ayliffe.

PRODUCER. n. f. [from produce.] One that generates or produces.

By examining how I, that could contribute nothing to mine own being, should be here, I came to ask the same question for my father, and so am led in a direct line to a first producer that must be more than man. Swift.

Whenever want of money, or want of desire in the consumer, make the price low, that immediately reaches the first producer. Locke.

PRODUCIBLE. adj. [from produce.]

1. Such as may be exhibited.

That is accounted probable, which has better arguments producible for it, than can be brought against it. South.

Many warm expressions of the fathers are producible in this case. Decay of Piety.

2. Such as may be generated or made.

The salts producible, are the alcais or fixt salts, which seem to have an antipathy with acid ones. Boyle.

PRODUCIBLENESS. n. f. [from producible.] The state of being producible.

To confirm our doctrine of the producibility of salts, Helmont assures us, that by Paracelsus's sal circulatum solid bodies, particularly stones, may be transmutated into actual salt equiponderant. Boyle.

PRODUCT. n. f. [productus, Lat. produit, Fr.]

1. Something produced, as fruits, grain, metals.

The landholder, having nothing but what the product of his land will yield, must take the market-rate. Locke.

Our British products are of such kinds and quantities, as can turn the balance of trade to our advantage. Addison.

Range in the same quarter, the products of the same season. Spektator.

See thy bright altars
Heap'd with the products of Sabæan springs. Pope.

2. Work; composition.

Most of those books, which have obtained great reputation in the world, are the products of great and wise men. Watts.

3. Thing consequential; effect.

These are the products
Of those ill-mated marriages. Milton's Par. Lost.

PRODUCTILE. adj. [from producere, Lat.] Which may be produced.

PRODUCTION. n. f. [productio, Fr. from produci.]

1. The act of producing.

A painter should foresee the harmony of the lights and shadows, taking from each of them that which will most conduce to the production of a beautiful effect. Dryden.

2. The thing produced; fruit; product.

The best of queens and best of herbs we owe
To that bold nation, which the way did show
To the fair region, where the sun does rise, Whole rich productions we so justly prize. Waller.

What would become of the scrofulous consumptive production, furnished by our men of wit and learning. Swift.

3. Composition.

We have had our names prefixed at length, to whole volumes of mean productions. Swift.

PRODUCTIVE. adj. [from producere.] Having the power to produce; fertile; generative; efficient.

In thee
Not in themselves, all their known virtue appears Productive as in herb and plant. Milton.

This is turning nobility unto a principle of virtue, and making it productive of merit, as it is understood to have been originally a reward of it. Spektator, N<sup>o</sup> 537.

PRO

Be thou my aid, my tuneful song inspire,
And kindle, with thy own productive fire. Dryden.
If the productive fat of the marl be spent, it is not capable of being mended with new. Mortimer.
Numbers of Scots are glad to exchange their barren hills for our fruitful vales to productive of that grain. Swift.
Hymen's flames like stars unite,
And burn for ever one;
Chaste as cold Cynthia's virgin light,
Productive as the sun. Pope.
Plutarch, in his life of Theseus, says, that that age was productive of men of prodigious stature. Bryson.
PROEM. n. f. [proemium; proemium, Lat. proeme, old Fr.]
Preface; introduction.
So glaz'd the tempter, and his proem tun'd. Milton.
Thus much may serve by way of proem,
Proceed we therefore to our poem. Swift's Miscel.
Julian has, in the proem to the digests, only prenexed
the term of five years for studying the laws. Ayliffe.
PROFANA'TION. n. f. [profanation, Fr. from profanus, Lat.]
1. The act of violating any thing sacred.
He knew how bold men are to take even from God himself; how hardly that house would be kept from impious pro- fanation he knew. Hooker, b. v. f. 12.
What I am and what I would, are to your ears, divinity;
to any others, profanation. Shaksp. Twelfth Night.
I were profanation of our joys,
To tell the laity our love. Donne.
All profanation and invasion of things sacred, is an offence against the eternal law of nature. South.
Others think I ought not to have translated Chaucer: they suppose a veneration due to his old language, and that it is little less than profanation and sacrilege to alter it. Dryden.
2. Irreverence to holy things or persons.
Great men may jest with saints, 'tis wit in them;
But, in the less, foul profanation. Shaksp.
PROFANE. adj. [profane, Fr. from profanus, Lat.]
1. Irreverent to sacred names or things.
Profane fellow!
Wert thou the son of Jupiter, and no more
But what thou art besides, thou wert too base
To be his groom. Shaksp. Cymbeline.
These have caused the weak to stumble, and the profane to blaspheme, offending the one, and hardening the other. South.
2. Not sacred; secular.
The universality of the deluge is attested by profane history; for the fame of it is gone through the earth, and there are records or traditions concerning it in all the parts of this and the new-found world. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
3. Polluted; not pure.
Nothing is profane that serveth to holy things. Raleigh.
4. Not purified by holy rites.
Far hence be souls profane,
The Sibyl cry'd, and from the grove abstain. Dryden.
To PROFANE. v. a. [profane, Lat. profanus, Fr.]
1. To violate; to pollute.
He then, that is not furnish'd in this fort,
Doth but usurp the sacred name of knight,
Profaning this most honourable order. Shaksp.
Foretasted fruit
Profan'd first by the serpent, by him first Made common and unhallow'd. Milton.
Pity the temple profaned of ungodly men. 2 Mac. viii. 2.
How far have we
Profan'd thy heav'nly gift of poetry?
Made prostitute and profligate the muse,
Debas'd. Dryden.
2. To put to wrong use.
I feel me much to blame. Shaksp.
PROFANELY. adv. [profane.] With irreverence to sacred names or things.
I will hold my tongue no more, as touching their wickedness, which they profanely commit. 2 Esdr. xv. 8.
Let none of things serious, much less of divine,
When belly and head's full, profanely dispute. B. Johnf.
That proud scholar, intending to erect altars to Virgil, speaks of Homer too profanely. Bryson's Notes on the Odyssey.
PROFANER. n. f. [profane.] Polluter; violator.
The argument which our Saviour useth against profaners of the temple, he taketh from the use wherunto it was with solemnity consecrated. Hooker, b. v. f. 12.
Rebellious subjects, enemies to peace,
Profaners of this neighbour stained steel. Shaksp.
There are a lighter ludicrous sort of profaners, who use the scripture to furnish out their jests. Gov. of the Tongue.
PROFANENESS. n. f. [profane.] Irreverence of what is sacred.
Apollo, pardon
My great profaneness: 'gainst thy oracle! Shaksp.
You can banish from thence scurrility and profaneness, and restrain the licentious insolence of poets and their actors. Dry.

PRO

Edicts against immorality and profaneness, laws, against oaths and execrations, we trample upon. Attorney.
PROFECTION. n. f. [profectio, Lat.] Advance; progression.
This, with profectio of the horoscope unto the seventh house or opposite signs, every seventh year oppresseth living natures. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
To PROFESS. v. a. [professio, Fr. from professus, Lat.]
1. To declare himself in strong terms of any opinion or passion.
Would you have me speak after my custom,
As being a profess'd tyrant to their sex. Shaksp.
Pretending first Wife to fly pain, professing next the spy. Milton.
A servant to thy sex, a slave to thee,
A foe profess't to barren chastity. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
2. To make a show of any sentiments by loud declaration.
Love well your father;
To your professing bosoms I commit him. Shaksp.
3. To declare publicly one's skill in any art or science, so as to invite employment.
What, master, read you? first resolve me that.
—I read that profess's the art of love. Shaksp.
Without eyes thou shalt want light; profess's not the knowledge therefore that thou hast not. Ecclus iii. 25.
To PROFESS. v. n.
1. To declare openly.
The day almost itself professes yours,
And little is to do. Shaksp. Macbeth.
They profess, that they know God, but in works they deny him. Tit. i. 16.
2. To profess unto the Lord, that I am come unto the country, which the Lord sware unto our fathers. Deut. xxvi. 3.
As he does conceive,
He is dishonour'd by a man, which ever
Profess'd to him; why, his revenges must
In that be made more bitter. Shaksp.
PROFESSOR. n. f. [professor, Fr. from professus, Lat.] According to open declaration made by himself.
I could not grant too much to men, that being professors my subjects, pretended religious strictness. King Charles.
Virgil, whom he profess'dly imitated, has surpassed him among the Romans. Dryden's Dedication to Juvenal.
England I travelled over, profess'dly searching all places I passed along. Woodward.
PROFESSION. n. f. [professio, Fr. from professus.]
1. Calling; vocation; known employment.
I must tell you,
You tender more your person's honour, than Your high profession spiritual. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
If we confound arts with the abuse of them, we shall condemn all honest trades; for there are that deceive in all pro- fessions, and bury in forgetfulness all knowledge. Raleigh.
Some of our profession keep wounds tainted. Wotton.
No other one race, not the sons of any one other pro- fession, not perhaps altogether, are so much scattered amongst all professions, as the sons of clergymen. Sprat's Sermon.
This is a practice, in which multitudes, besides those of the learned professions, may be engaged. Watt.
2. Declaration.
A naked profession may have credit, where no other evidence can be given. Glauvill's Sepul.
Most profligately false, with the strongest professions of sincerity. Swift.
3. The act of declaring one's self of any party or opinion.
For by oil in their lamps, and the first lighting of them, which was common to them both, is meant that solemn pro- fession of faith and repentance, which all christians make in baptism. Tillotson's Sermon.
When christianity came to be taken up, for the sake of those civil encouragements which attended their professions, the complaint was applicable to christians. Swift.
PROFESSORIAL. adj. [professorial.] Relating to a particular calling or profession.
Professorial, as well as national, reflections are to be avoided. Clarissa.
PROFESSOR. n. f. [professor, Fr. from professus.]
1. One who declares himself of any opinion or party.
When the holiness of the professors of religion is decayed you may doubt the springing up of a new sect. Bacon's Essays.
2. One who publicly practises or teaches an art.
Professors in most sciences, are generally the worst qualified to explain their meanings to those who are not of their tribes. Swift.
3. One who is visibly religious.
Ordinary illiterate people, who were professors, that stewed a concern for religion, seemed much conversant in St. Paul's Epistles. Lake.
PROFESSORSHIP. n. f. [professorship.] The station or office of a public teacher.
Dr. Prideaux succeeded him in the professorship, being then elected bishop of Worcester, Sanderfon succeeded him in the regius professorship. Wotton.
To PROFFER.

PRO

To PROFFER. v. a. [proferre, Lat. proferre, Fr.]
1. To propose; to offer.
To them that covet such eye-glutting gain,
Proffer thy gifts, and fitter servants entertain. Fairy Queen.
None, among the choice and prime
Of those heav'n-warring champions, could be found
So hardy as to proffer, or accept Alone, the dreadful voyage. Milton's Par. Lost.
Does Cato send this answer back to Cæsar,
For all his generous cares and proffer'd friendship. Addis.
2. To attempt.
PROFFER. n. f. [proffer.]
1. Offer made; something proposed to acceptance.
Basilus, content to take that, since he could have no more, allowed her reasons, and took her proffer thankfully. Sidney.
Proffer, not took, reap thanks for their reward. Shaksp.
The king
Great proffer sends of pardon and of grace,
If they would yield, and quietness embrace. Daniel.
He made a proffer to lay down his commission of command in the army. Clarendon.
But these, nor all the proffers you can make,
Are worth the heifer which I set to stake. Dryden.
2. Effay; attempt.
It is done with time, and by little and little, and with many essays and proffers. Bacon's Essays.
PROFFERER. n. f. [profferer.] He that offers.
Maids, in modesty, say no, to that
Which they would have the profferer construe ay. Shaksp.
He who always refuses, taxes the profferer with indiscretion, and declares his assistance needless. Collier.
PROFICIENCY. n. f. [proficiency, Lat.] Profit; advance.
PROFICIENT. n. f. [proficiens, Lat.] One who has made advances in any study or business.
I am so good a proficient in one quarter of an hour, that I can drink with any tinker in his own language. Shaksp.
I am disposed to receive further light in this matter, from those whom it will be no disparagement for much greater pro- ficients than I to learn. Boyle.
Young deathlings were, by practice, made
Proficients in their father's trade. Swift's Miscel.
PROFICUOUS. adj. [proficius, Lat.] Advantageous; useful.
It is very proficius, to take a good large dose. Harvey.
To future times
Proficius, such a race of men produce,
As in the cause of virtue firm, may fix
Her throne inviolate. Philips.
PROFITE. n. f. [profite, Fr.] The side face; half face.
The painter will not take that side of the face, which has some notorious blemish in it; but either draw it in profile, or else shadow the more imperfect side. Dryden.
Till the end of the third century, I have not seen a Roman emperor drawn with a full face: they always appear in profile, which gives us the view of a head very majestic. Addison.
PROFIT. n. f. [profit, Fr.]
1. Gain; pecuniary advantage.
Thou must know,
'Tis not my profit that does lead mine honour. Shaksp.
He thinks it highly just, that all rewards of trust, profits, or dignity should be given only to those, whose principles direct them to preserve the constitution. Swift.
2. Advantage; accession of good.
What profit is it for men now to live in heaviness, and after death to look for punishment? 2 Esdr. vii. 47.
Wisdom that is hid, and treasure that is hoarded up, what profit is in them both? Ecclus. xi. 30.
Say not what profit is there of my service; and what good things shall I have hereafter. Ecclus. xi. 23.
The king did not love the barren wars with Scotland, though he made his profit of the noise of them. Bacon.
3. Improvement; advancement; proficiency.
To PROFIT. v. a. [profit, Fr.]
1. To benefit; to advantage.
Whereto might the strength of their hands profit me. Job.
Let it profit thee to have heard,
By terrible example, the reward
Of disobedience. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.
2. To improve; to advance.
'Tis a great means of profiting yourself, to copy diligently excellent pieces and beautiful deligins. Dryden.
To PROFIT. v. n.
1. To gain advantage.
The Romans, though possessed of their ports, did not profit much by trade. Arbutnot on Coins.

PRO

2. To make improvement.
Meditate upon these things, give thyself wholly to them;
that thy profiting may appear to all. 1 Tim. iv. 15.
She has profited to well already by your counsel, that she can say her lesson. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
3. To be of use or advantage.
Oft times nothing profits more,
Than self-esteem grounded on just and right. Milton.
What profited thy thoughts, and toils, and cares,
In vigour more confirm'd, and riper years? Prior.
PROFITABLE. adj. [profitable, Fr. from profrui.]
1. Gainful; lucrative.
A pound of man's flesh, taken from a man,
Is not so estimable or profitable,
As flesh of muttons, beefs, or goats. Shaksp.
The planting of hop-yards, sowing of wheat and rape-seed, are found very profitable for the planters, in places apt for them, and consequently profitable for the kingdom. Bacon.
2. Useful; advantageous.
To wail friends lost
Is not by much so wholesome, profitable,
As to rejoice at friends but newly found. Shaksp.
Then Judas, thinking indeed that they would be profitable in many things, granted them peace. 2 Mac. xii.
What was so profitable to the empire, became fatal to the emperor. Arbutnot on Coins.
PROFITABLENESS. n. f. [profitableness.]
1. Gainfulness.
2. Usefulness; advantageousness.
We will now briefly take notice of the profitableness of plants for phylick and food. More's Antidote against Atheism.
What shall be the just portion of those, whom neither the condescension or kindness, nor wounds and sufferings of the son of God could persuade, nor yet the excellency, easiness and profitableness of his commands invite? Calamy's Sermons.
PROFITABLY. adv. [profitably.]
1. Gainfully.
2. Advantageously; usefully.
You have had many opportunities to settle this reflection, and have profitably employed them. Wake.
PROFITLESS. adj. [profitless.] Void of gain or advantage.
We must not think the Turk is so unskilful,
To leave that latest, which concerns him first;
Neglecting an attempt of ease and gain,
To wake and wage a danger profitless. Shaksp.
PROFLIGATE. adj. [profligatus, Lat.] Abandoned; loiter to virtue and decency; shameless.
Time sensibly all things impairs;
Our fathers have been worse than theirs,
And we than ours; next age will see A race more profligate than we,
With all the pains we take, have skill enough to be. Refo.
How far have we
Prophan'd thy heav'nly gift of poetry?
Made prostitute and profligate the muse,
Debas'd to each obscene and impious use,
Whose harmony was first ordain'd above
For tongues of angels, and for hymns of love. Dryden.
Though Phalaris his brazen bull were there,
And he would dictate what he'd have you swear,
Be not so profligate, but rather chuse
To guard your honour, and your life to lose. Dryden.
Melancholy objects and subjects will, at times, impress the most profligate spirits. Clarissa.
PROFLIGATE. n. f. An abandoned shameless wretch.
It is pleasant to see a notorious profligate seized with a concern for his religion, and converting his spleen into zeal. Add.
I have heard a profligate offer much stronger arguments against paying his debts, than ever he was known to do against christianity; because he happened to be closter pressed by the baillif than the parson. Swift's Miscellanies.
How could such a profligate as Antony, or a boy of eighteen, like Octavius, ever dare to dream of giving the law to such an empire and people. Swift.
To PROFLIGATE. v. a. [profligatus, Lat.] To drive away. A word borrowed from the Latin without alteration of the sense, but not used.
Lavatories, to wash the temples, hands, wrists, and ju-gulars, do potentially profligate and keep off the venom. Harv.
PROFLIGATELY. adv. [profligately.] Shamelessly.
Most profligately false, with the strongest professions of sincerity. Swift's Miscellanies.
PROFLIGATENESS. n. f. [profligateness.] The quality of being profligate.
PROFLUENCE. n. f. [profluent.] Progress; course.
In the profluence or proceedings of their fortunes, there was much difference between them. Wotton.
PROFLUENT. adj. [profluent, Lat.] Flowing forward.
Teach all nations what of him they learn'd,
And his salvation; them who shall believe Baptizing in the profluent stream, the sign
Of washing them from guilt of sin. Milton.
PROFOUND.

PRO

PROFOUND. adj. [profund, Fr. profundus, Lat.]

1. Deep; descending far below the surface; low with respect to the neighbouring places.

All else deep snow and ice,

A gulf profound, as that Serbionian bog

Between Damata and mount Casus old.

He hath hither thrust me down

Into this gloom of Tartarus profound.

2. Intellectually deep; not obvious to the mind; not easily fathomed by the mind: as, a profound treatise.

3. Lowly; humble; submissive; submissive.

What words wilt thou use to move thy God to hear thee?

what humble gestures? what profound reverence?

4. Learned beyond the common reach; knowing to the bottom.

Not orators only with the people, but even the very profoundest disputers in all faculties, have hereby often, with the best learned, prevailed most.

5. Deep in contrivance.

The revolvers are profound to make slaughter, though I have been a rebuker of them.

PROFOUND. n. f.

1. The deep; the main; the sea.

God, in the fathomless profound,

Hath all his choice commanders drown'd.

Now I die absent in the vast profound;

And me without myself the seas have drown'd.

2. The abyss.

If some other place th' ethereal king

Possesses lately, thither to arrive,

I travel this profound.

To PROFOUND. v. n. [from the noun.] To dive; to penetrate. A barbarous word.

We cannot profound into the hidden things of nature, nor see the first springs that set the rest a-going.

PROFOUNDLY. adv. [from profound.]

1. Deeply; with deep concern.

Why sigh you so profoundly?

The virgin started at her father's name,

And sigh'd profoundly, conscious of the shame.

2. With great degrees of knowledge; with deep insight.

Domenichino was profoundly skill'd in all the parts of painting, but wanting genius, he had less of nobleness.

PROFOUNDNESS. n. f. [from profound.]

1. Depth of place.

2. Depth of knowledge.

Their wits, which did every where else conquer hardness, were with profoundness here over-matched.

PROFUNDITY. n. f. [from profound.] Depth of place or knowledge.

The other turn'd

Round through the vast profundity obscure.

PROFUSE. adj. [profusus, Lat.] Lavish; too liberal; prodigal; overabounding; exuberant.

On a green shady bank, profuse of flow'rs,

Penfive I sat.

Oh liberty, thou goddess heav'nly bright,

Profuse of bliss, and pregnant with delight.

One long dead has a due proportion of praise; in which, whilst he lived, his friends were too profuse, and his enemies too sparing.

PROFUSELY. adv. [from profuse.]

1. Lavishly; prodigally.

2. With exuberance.

Then spring the living herbs profusely wild.

PROFUSINESS. n. f. [from profuse.] Lavishness; prodigality.

One of a mean fortune manages his store with extreme parsimony; but, with fear of running into profuseness, never arrives to the magnificence of living.

PROFUSION. n. f. [profusio, Lat. profusio, Fr. from profuse.]

1. Lavishness; prodigality; extravagance.

What meant thy pompous progress through the empire?

Thy vast profusion to the factious nobles.

2. Lavish expence; superfluous effusion.

He was desirous to avoid not only profusion, but the least effusion of christian blood.

3. Abundance; exuberant plenty.

Trade is fitted to the nature of our country, as it abounds with a great profusion of commodities of its own growth, very convenient for other countries.

The raptur'd eye,

The fair profusion, yellow Autumn spies.

To PRO. v. n.

1. To rob; to steal.

2. To shift meanly for provisions. A low word.

PRO. n. f. [from the verb.] Victuals; provision of any kind. A low word.

PRO

O nephew! your grief is but folly,

In town you may find better prog.

Spouse tucked up doth in patters tudge it,

With handkerchief of prog, like trull with budget;

And eat by turns plumcake and judge it.

PROGENATION. n. f. [progenatio, Lat.] The act of begetting; propagation.

PROGENITOR. n. f. [progenitor, Lat.] A forefather; an ancestor in a direct line.

Although these things be already past away by her progenitors, former grants unto those lords, yet I could find a way to remedy a great part thereof.

Like true subjects, sons of your progenitors,

Go cheerfully together.

All generations had hither come,

From all the ends of th' Earth, to celebrate

And reverence thee, their great progenitor.

Power by right of fatherhood is not possible in any one, otherwise than as Adam's heir, or as progenitor over his own descendants.

The principal actors in Milton's poem are not only our progenitors, but representatives.

PROGENY. n. f. [progenies, old Fr. progenies, Lat.] Offspring; race; generation.

The sons of God have God's own natural son as a second Adam from heaven, whose race and progeny they are by spiritual and heavenly birth.

Not me begotten of a shepherd swain,

But issu'd from the progeny of kings.

By promise he receives

Gift to his progeny of all that land.

A golden progeny from heav'n descends.

Thus shall we live in perfect bliss, and see

Deathless ourselves, our numerous progeny.

We are the more pleas'd to behold the throne furnished by a numerous progeny, when we consider the virtues of those from whom they descend.

PROGNOSTICABLE. adj. [from prognosticate.] Such as may be foreknown or foretold.

The causes of this inundation cannot be regular, and therefore their effects not prognosticable like eclipses.

To PROGNOSTICATE. v. a. [from prognosticate.] To foretell; to foreknow.

He had now outlived the day, which his tutor Sandford had prognosticated upon his nativity he would not outlive.

Unkill'd in schemes by planets to foreknow,

I neither will, nor can prognosticate,

To the young gaping heir, his father's fate.

PROGNOSTICATION. n. f. [from prognosticate.]

1. The act of foreknowing or foretelling.

If an oily palm be not a fruitful prognostication, I cannot scratch mine ear.

Raw as he is, and in the hottest day prognostication proclaims, shall he be set against a brick-wall, the sun looking with a southward eye upon him, where he is to behold him, with flies blown to death.

This theory of the earth begins to be a kind of prophecy or prognostication of things to come, as it hath been hitherto an history of things past.

2. Foretold.

He bid him farewell, arming himself in a black armour, as a badge or prognostication of his mind.

PROGNOSTICATOR. n. f. [from prognosticate.] Foreteller; foreknower.

That astrologer, who made his almanack give a tolerable account of the weather by a direct inversion of the common prognosticators, to let his belief run quite counter to reports.

PROGNOSTICK. adj. [prognostique, Fr. prognostique, Lat.] Foretelling disease or recovery; foretelling; as, a prognostick sign.

PROGNOSTICK. n. f. [from the adj.]

1. The skill of foretelling diseases or the event of diseases.

Hippocrates's prognostick is generally true, that it is very hard to resolve a small apoplexy.

2. A prediction.

Though your prognosticks run too fast,

They must be verily'd at last.

3. A token foretelling.

Whatever you are or shall be, has been but an early prognostick from what you were.

Careful observers

By sure prognosticks may foretell a show'r.

PROGRESS. n. f. [progrus, Fr. from progressus, Lat.]

1. Course; procession; passage.

I cannot, by the progress of the stars,

Give guests how near to-day.

The morn begins

Her rosy progress liming.

The Sylphs behold it kindling as it flies,

And pleas'd pursue its progress through the skies.

2. Advancement;

PRO

2. Advancement; motion forward.

Through all thy veins shall run

A cold and drowsy humour, which shall seize

Each vital spirit; for no pulse shall keep

His nat'ral progress, but furcace to beat.

This motion worketh in round at first, which way to deliver itself; and then worketh in progress, where it findeth the deliverance easiest.

Out of Ethiopia beyond Egypt had been a strange progress for ten hundred thousand men.

Whoever understands the progress and revolutions of nature, will see that neither the present form of the earth, nor its first form, were permanent and immutable.

It is impossible the mind should ever be stopped in its progress in this space.

The bounds of all body we have no difficulty to arrive at; but when the mind is there, it finds nothing to hinder its progress into the endless expansion.

Perhaps I judge hastily, there being several, in whose writings I have made very little progress.

Intellectual improvement; advancement in knowledge.

Solon the wife his progress never ceas'd,

But still his learning with his days increas'd.

It is strange, that men should not have made more progress in the knowledge of these things.

Several defects in the understanding hinder it in its progress to knowledge.

Others despond at the first difficulty, and conclude, that making any progress in knowledge, farther than serves their ordinary business, is above their capacities.

Removal from one place to another.

From Egypt arts their progress made to Greece,

Wrapt in the fable of the golden fleece.

A journey of state; a circuit.

He gave order, that there should be nothing in his journey like unto a warlike march, but rather like unto the progress of a king in full peace.

O may I live to hail the day,

When the glad nation shall survey

Their sovereign, through his wide command,

Passing in progress o'er the land.

To PROGRESS. v. n. [progressus, Lat.] To move forward; to pass. Not used.

Let me wipe off this honourable dew,

That silverly doth progress on thy cheeks.

PROGRESSION. n. f. [progressio, Fr. progressio, Lat.]

1. Process; regular and gradual advance.

The figures of the diameters of these rings, made by any prismatic colour, were in arithmetical progression.

2. Motion forward.

Those worthies, who endeavour the advancement of learning, are likely to find a clearer progression, when so many rubs are levelled.

In philosophical enquiries, the order of nature should govern, which in all progression is to go from the place one is then in, to that which lies next to it.

3. Course; passage.

He hath fram'd a letter, which accidentally, or by the way of progression, hath miscarried.

Intellectual advance.

For the having the long progression of the thoughts to first principles, the mind should provide several intermediate principles.

PROGRESSIONAL. adj. [from progression.] Such as are in a state of increase or advance.

They maintain their accomplished ends, and relapse not again unto their professional imperfections.

PROGRESSIVE. adj. [progressivus, Fr. from progressus.] Going forward; advancing.

Princes, if they use ambitious men, should handle it so, as they be still progressive, and not retrograde.

In progressive motion, the arms and legs move successively; but in natation, both together.

The progressive motion of this animal is made not by walking, but by leaping.

Their course

Progressive, retrograde, or standing still.

Ere the progressive course of restless age

Performs three thousand times its annual stage,

May not our power and learning be suppress'd,

And arts and empire learn to travel west?

PROGRESSIVELY. adv. [from progressive.] By gradual steps or regular course.

The reason why they fall in that order, from the greatest effects progressively to the least, is, because the greatest effects denote a greater distance of the moon before the sun, and consequently a nearer approach to her conjunction.

PROGRESSIVENESS. n. f. [from progressive.] The state of advancing.

To PROHIBIT. v. a. [prohibere, Lat. prohibere, Fr.]

1. To forbid; to interdict by authority.

She would not let them know of his close lying in that prohibited place, because they would be offended.

2. Advancement;

PRO

The weightiest, which it did command them, are to us in the gospel prohibited.

2. To debar; to hinder.

Gates of burning adamant

Bar'd over us, prohibit all egress.

PROHIBITER. n. f. [from prohibere.] Forbider; interdicter.

PROHIBITION. n. f. [prohibition, Fr. prohibition, Lat. from prohibere.] Forbiddance; interdict; act of forbidding.

Might there not be some other mystery in this prohibition, than they think of?

There is a prohibition to divine,

That cravens my weak hand.

He bestowed the liberal choice of all things, with one only prohibition, to try his obedience.

Let us not think hard

One early prohibition, who enjoy

Free leave so large to all things else.

The law of God in the ten commandments confits mostly of prohibitions; thou shalt not do such a thing.

PROHIBITORY. adj. [from prohibere.] Implying prohibition; forbidding.

A prohibition will lie on this statute, notwithstanding the penalty annexed; because it has words prohibitory, as well as a penalty annexed.

To PROJECT. v. a. [projicio, projectus, Lat.]

1. To throw out; to cast forward.

Th' ascending villas

Project long shadows o'er the crystal tide.

2. To exhibit a form, as of the image thrown on a mirror.

Diffusive of themselves where e'er they pass,

They make that warmth in others they expect;

Their valour works like bodies on a glass,

And does its image on their men project.

If we had a plan of the naked lines of longitude and latitude, projected on the meridian, a learner might much more speedily advance himself in the knowledge of geography.

3. [Projecter, Fr.] To scheme; to form in the mind; to contrive.

It ceases to be counsel, to compel men to assent to whatever tumultuary patrons shall project.

What fit we then projecting peace and war?

What desire, by which nature projects its own pleasure or preservation, can be gratified by another man's personal pursuit of his own vice?

To PROJECT. v. n. To jut out; to shoot forward; to shoot beyond something next it.

PROJECT. n. f. [project, Fr. from the verb.] Scheme; design; contrivance.

It is a discovering the longitude, and deserves a much higher name than that of a project.

In the various projects of happiness, devised by human reason, there still appeared inconsistencies not to be reconciled.

PROJECTILE. n. f. [from the adj.] A body put in motion.

Projectiles would ever move on in the same right line, did not the air, their own gravity, or the ruggedness of the plane stop their motion.

PROJECTILE. adj. [projectile, Fr.] Impelled forward.

Good blood, and a due projectile motion or circulation are necessary to convert the aliment into laudable juices.

PROJECTION. n. f. [from project.]

1. The act of shooting forwards.

If the electric be held unto the light, many particles thereof will be discharged from it, which motion is performed by the breath of the effluvia issuing with agility; for as the electric cooleth, the projection of the atoms ceaseth.

2. [Projection, Fr.] Plan; delineation. See to PROJECT.

For the bulk of the learners of astronomy, that projection of the stars is best, which includes in it all the stars in our horizon, reaching to the 38th degree of the southern latitude.

3. Scheme; plan of action.

4. [Projection, Fr.] In chemistry, an operation; crisis of an operation; moment of transmutation.

To PROIN. v. a. [a corruption of prune.] To lop; to cut; to trim; to prune.

I fit and pruin my wings
After flight, and put new flings
To my shafts. Benj. Johnson.
The country husbandman will not give the pruning knife to a young plant, as not able to admit the scar. B. Johnson.
To PROLATE. v. a. [prolatum, Lat.] To pronounce; to utter.

The pressures of war have somewhat cowed their spirits, as may be gathered from the accent of their words, which they prolate in a whining querulous tone, as if still complaining and crest-fallen. Howell.

PROLATE. adj. [prolatus, Lat.] Oblate; flat.
As to the prolate spheroidal figure, though it be the necessary result of the earth's rotation about its own axis, yet it is also very convenient for us. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

PROLATION. n. f. [prolatio, Lat.]
1. Pronunciation; utterance.

Parrots, having been used to be fed at the prolation of certain words, may afterwards pronounce the same. Ray.

PROLIFICAL. adj. [from prolissus.] By way of multiplication; generative; pregnant; productive.

Main ocean flow'd; not idle, but with warm
Prolifick humour fostering all her globe, Fermented the great mother to conceive, Milton's Par. Lost.

Satiate with genial moisture.
Every dispute in religion grew prolissus, and in ventilating one question, many new ones were started. Decay of Piety.

His vital pow'r air, earth and seas supplies,
And breeds what'er is bred beneath the skies;
For every kind, by thy prolissus might, Dryden.

Strives.
All dogs are of one species, they mingling together in generation, and the breed of such mixtures being prolissus. Ray.

From the middle of the world,
The sun's prolissus rays are hurl'd;
'Tis from that seat he darts those beams, Prior.

PROLIVACALLY. adv. [from prolissus.] Fruitfully; pregnantly.

PROLIX. adj. [prolixus, Fr. prolixus, Latin.]

1. Long; tedious; not concise.

According to the caution we have been so prolix in giving, if we aim at right understanding the true nature of it, we must examine what apprehension mankind make of it. Digby.

Should I at large repeat
The bead-roll of her vicious tricks,
My poem would be too prolix. Prior.

2. Of long duration. This is a very rare sense.

If the appellant appoints a term too prolix, the judge may then assign a competent term. Ayliffe's Patergen.

Prompter to sink the state, than he to save. Prior.

4. Ready; told down: as, prompt payment.

To PROMPT. v. a. [promptare, Italian.]

1. To assist by private instruction; to help at a loss.

Sitting in some place, where no man shall prompt him, let the child translate his lesson. Acham.

You've put me now to such a part, which never I shall discharge to th' life.

—Come, come, we'll prompt you. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

My voice shall found as you do prompt mine ear,
And I will stoop and humble my intents
To your well practis'd wife directions. Shakespeare.

None could hold the book so well to prompt and instruct this stage play, as she could. Bacon's Henry VII.

He needed not one to prompt</

2. An admonisher; a reminder.
We understand our duty without a teacher, and acquit ourselves as we ought to do without a prompter. L'Estrange.
PROMPTITUDE. n. f. [promptitudo, Fr. from promptus, Lat.] Readiness; quickness.
PROMPTLY. adv. [from prompt.] Readily; quickly; expeditiously.
He that does his merchandize cheerfully, promptly and readily, and the works of religion slowly, it is a sign that his heart is not right with God. Taylor.
PROMPTNESS. n. f. [from prompt.] Readiness; quickness; alacrity.
Had not this stop been given him by that accidental sickness, his great courage and promptness of mind would have carried him directly forward to the enemy, till he had met him in the open plains of Persia. South's Sermons.
Firm and rigid muscles, strong pulse, activity, and promptness in animal actions, are signs of strong fibres. Arbuthnot.
PROMPTURE. n. f. [from prompt.] Suggestion; motion given by another; instigation. A word not used.
Though he hath fallen by prompture of the blood;
Yet hath he in him such a mind of honour,
That had he twenty heads to tender down
On twenty bloody blocks, he'd yield them up. Shakespeare.
PROMPTUARY. n. f. [promptuaire, Fr. from promptuarium, Lat.] A storehouse; a repository; a magazine.
This stratum is still expanded at top, serving as the seminary or promptuary, that furnisheth forth matter for the formation of animal and vegetable bodies. Woodward.
TO PROMULGATE. v. a. [promulgo, Lat.] To publish; to make known by open declaration.
Those albeit I know he nothing so much hateth as to promulgate, yet I hope that this will occasion him to put forth divers other goodly works. Spenser.
Those, to whom he entrusted the promulgating of the gospel, had far different instructions. Decay of Piety.
It is certain laws, by virtue of any function they receive from the promulgated will of the legislature, reach not a stranger, if by the law of nature every man hath not a power to punish offences against it. Locke.
PROMULGATION. n. f. [promulgatio, Lat. from promulgare.] Publication; open exhibition.
The stream and current of this rule hath gone as far, it hath continued as long as the very promulgation of the gospel. Hooker, b. v. f. 42.
The very promulgation of the punishment will be part of the punishment, and anticipate the execution. South.
PROMULGATOR. n. f. [from promulgate.] Publisher; open teacher.
How groundless a calumny this is, appears from the sanctity of the christian religion, which excludes fraud and falsehood; so also from the designments and aims of its first promulgators. Decay of Piety.
TO PROMULGE. v. a. [from promulgo, Lat.] To promulgate; to publish; to teach openly.
The chief design of them is, to establish the truth of a new revelation in those countries, where it is first promulgated and propagated. Atterbury.
PROMULGER. n. f. [from promulge.] Publisher; promulgator.
The promulgators of our religion, Jesus Christ and his apostles, raised men and women from the dead, not once only, but often. Atterbury.
PROMOTOR. n. f. In anatomy, a muscle of the radius, of which there are two, that help to turn the palm downwards. Diet.
PRONE. adj. [pronus, Latin.]
  1. Bending downward; not erect.
There wanted yet a creature not prone,
And brute as other creatures, but indu'd
With faculty of reason, might erect
His stature, and upright with front serene Govern the rest. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii.
2. Lying with the face downwards: contrary to supine.
Upon these three positions in man, wherein the spine can only be at right lines with the thigh, arise those postures, prone, supine and erect. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
3. Precipitous; headlong; going downwards.
Down thither prone in flight
He speeds, and through the vast ethereal sky Sails between worlds. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v.
4. Declivous; sloping.
Since the floods demand,
For their descent, a prone and sinking land:
Does not this due declivity declare
A wife director's providential care?
5. Inclined; propense; disposed. It has commonly an ill sense.
The labour of doing good, with the pleasure arising from the contrary, doth make men for the most part slower to the one and prone to the other, than that duty, prescribed them by law, can prevail sufficiently with them. Hooker.
Those who are ready to confess him in judgment and profession, are very prone to deny him shamefully in their doings. South's Sermons.

- If we are prone to sedition, and delight in change, there is no cure more proper than trade, which supplies business to the active, and wealth to the indigent. Addison.
Still prone to change, though still the slaves of fate. Pope.
- PRONENESS. n. f. [from prone.]
  1. The state of bending downwards; not erectness.
If erectness be taken, as it is largely opposed unto proneness, or the posture of animals looking downwards, carrying their venters, or opposite part to the spine, directly towards the earth, it may admit of question. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
2. The state of lying with the face downwards; not supineness.
3. Defect; declivity.
4. Inclination; propension; disposition to ill.
The holy spirit saw that mankind is unto virtue hardly drawn, and that righteousness is the less accounted of, by reason of the proneness of our affections to that which delighteth. Hooker, b. v. f. 8.
The soul being first from nothing brought,
When God's grace fails her, doth to nothing fall;
And this declining proneness unto nought,
Is ev'n that fin that we are born withal. Davies.
He instituted this way of worship, because of the casualty of their hearts, and their proneness of the people to idolatry. Tillotson's Sermons.
The proneness of good men to commiserate want, in whatsoever shape it appears. Atterbury's Sermons.
How great is the proneness of our nature, to comply with this temptation. Rogers's Sermons.
PRONG. n. f. [pronghen, Dutch, to squeeze. Minsheu.] A fork.
The cooks make no more ado, but slicing it into little gobbets, prick it on a prong of iron, and hang it in a furnace. Sandys's Journey.
Whacum his sea-coal prong threw by,
And basely turn'd his back to fly. Hudibras.
With iron teeth of rakes and prongs to move
The crusted earth. Dryden's Virg. Georg.
PRONITY. n. f. [from prone.] Proneness. A word not used.
Of this mechanick proneity, I do not see any good tendency. Mare's Divine Dialogues.
PROMON. n. f. [promon, Fr. promonere, Lat.]
    1. Thou, he; we, ye, they, are names given to persons, and used instead of their proper names, from whence they had the name of promouns, as though they were not nouns themselves, but used instead of nouns. Clarke's Lat. Gram.
TO PRONOUNCE. v. a. [pronuncer, Fr. pronuncier, Lat.]
      1. To speak; to utter.
He pronounced all these words unto me with his mouth. Jer. xxxiv. 18.
2. To utter solemnly; to utter confidently.
She
So good a lady, that no tongue could ever Pronounce dishonour of her. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
I have pronounced the word, faith the Lord. Jer. xxxiv. 5.
So was his will Pronounc'd among the gods. Milton.
Sternly he pronounc'd the rigid interdiction.
The pronouncing of sentence of death is the office of inferior magistrates. Locke.
Abasom pronounced a sentence of death against his brother. Locke.
3. To form or articulate by the organs of speech.
Language of man pronounc'd
By tongue of brute, and human sense express'd. Milton.
Though diversity of tongues continue, this would render the pronouncing them easier. Holder.
4. To utter rhetorically.
TO PRONOUNCE. v. n. To speak with confidence or authority.
How confidently soever men pronounce of themselves, and believe that they are then most pious, when they are most eager and unquiet; yet 'tis sure this is far removed from the true genius of religion. Decay of Piety.
Every fool may believe, and pronounce confidently; but wife men will, in matters of discourse, conclude firmly, and in matters of fact, act surely. South's Sermons.
PRONOUNCER. n. f. [from pronounce.] One who pronounces.
The pronouncer thereof shall be condemned in expences. Ascham's Patergon.
PRONUNCIATION. n. f. [pronunciatio, from pronuncio, Lat. pronunciatio, Fr.] The act or mode of utterance.
The design of speaking being to communicate our thoughts by ready, easy and graceful pronunciation, all kind of letters have been searched out, that were serviceable for the purpose. Holder.
It were easy to produce thousands of his verses, which are lame for want of half a foot, sometimes a whole one, and which no pronunciation can make otherwise. Dryden.

- PROOF. n. f. [from prova.]
  1. Evidence; testimony; convincing token; convincing argument; means of conviction.
That they all have always so testified, I see not how we should possibly with a proof more palpable than this. Hooker.
This has neither evidence of truth, nor proof sufficient to give it warrant. Hooker.
Though the manner of their trials should be altered, yet the proof of every thing must needs be by the testimony of such persons as the parties shall produce. Spenser.
That which I shall report will bear no credit,
Were not the proof so high. Shakespeare.
One soul in both, whereof good proof
This day affords. Milton.
This, vers'd in death, th' infernal knight relates,
And then for proof fulfill'd their common fates. Dryden.
Those intervening ideas, which serve to shew the agreement of any two others, are called proofs. Locke.
2. Test; trial; experiment.
Retire or taste thy folly, and learn by proof,
Hell-born! not to contend with spirits of heav'n. Milton.
Samson,
This day to Dagon is a solemn feast,
Thy strength they know surpassing human race,
And now some publick proof thereof require
To honour this great feast. Milton's Agonistes.
When the imagination hath contrived the frame of such an instrument, and conceives that the event must infallibly answer its hopes, yet then does it strangely deceive in the proof. Wilkins's Math. Magick.
Gave, while he taught, and edify'd the more,
Because he shew'd, by proof, 'twas easy to be poor. Dryden.
My paper gives a timorous writer an opportunity of putting his abilities to the proof. Addison.
Here for ever must I stay,
Sad proof how well a lover can obey. Pope.
3. Firm temper; impenetrability; the state of being wrought and hardened, till the expected strength is found by trial to be attained.
Add proof unto mine armour with thy prayers,
And with thy blessings steel my lance's point:
To me the cries of fighting fields are charms;
Keen be my lab're, and of proof my arms;
I ask no other blessing of my stars. Dryden.
With arms of proof, both for myself and thee,
Chuse thou the best. Dryden.
4. Armour hardened till it will abide a certain trial.
He Bellona's bridegroom, lapt in proof, Confronted him. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
5. In printing, the rough draught of a sheet when first pulled.
PROOF. adj. [This word, though used as an adjective, is only elliptically put for proof.]
    1. Impenetrable; able to resist.
Now put your shields before your hearts, and fight
With hearts more proof than shields. Shakespeare.
Opportunity I here have had To try thee, fit thee, and confels have found thee
Proof against all temptation, as a rock
Of adamant. Milton's Par. Regain'd.
He past expression lov'd,
Proof to disdain, and not to be remov'd. Dryden.
When the mind is thoroughly tinctured, the man will be proof against all oppositions. Collier.
Guileless of hate, and proof against desire;
That all things weighs, and nothing can admire. Dryden.
When a capuchin, that was thought proof against bribes, had undertaken to carry on the work, he died a little after. Addison.
2. It has either to or against before the power to be resisted.
Imagin'd wife,
Constant, mature, proof against all assaults.
Deep in the snowy Alps, a lump of ice
By frost was harden'd to a mighty price;
Proof to the sun it now securely lies,
And the warm dog-star's hottest rage defies. Addison.
The God of day,
To make him proof against the burning ray,
His temples with celestial ointment wet. Addison.
PROOFLESS. adj. [from proof.] Unproved; wanting evidence.
Some were so manifestly weak and proofless, that he must be a very courteous adversary, that can grant them. Boyle.
TO PROOF. v. a. [proppen, Dutch.]
      1. To support by something placed under or against.
Lop overgrown, or proof, or bind,
One night decides. Milton.
2. To support by standing under or against.
Like these earth unsupported keeps its place,
Though no fix'd bottom proofs the weighty mass.
External shows the growing mass faintly,
Till the bright mountains proof th' incumbent sky;
As Atlas fix'd each heavy pile appears. Pope.

3. To sustain; to support.
The nearer I find myself verging to that period, which is to be labour and sorrow, the more I prop myself upon those few supports that are left me. Pope.
PROP. n. f. [proppe, Dutch.] A support; a stay; that on which any thing rests.
The boy was the very staff of my age, my very prop. Shakespeare.
You take my house, when you do take the prop
That doth sustain my house; you take my life,
When you do take the means whereby I live. Shakespeare.
Some plants creep along the ground, or wind about other trees or props, and cannot support themselves. Bacon.
That he might on many props repose,
He strengthens his own, and who his part did take. Daniel.
Again, if by the body's prop we stand,
If on the body's life, her life depend,
As Meleager's on the fatal brand,
The body's good he only would intend. Davies.
Fairer unsupported flower
From her best prop so far. Milton.
The current of his victories found no stop,
Till Cromwell came, his party's chiefest prop. Waller.
'Twas a considerable time before the great fragments that fell rested in a firm posture; for the props and stays, whereby they leaned one upon another, often failed. Burnet.
The props return
Into thy house, that bore the burden'd vines. Dryden.
PROPAGABLE. adj. [from propagate.] Such as may be spread; such as may be continued by succession.
Such creatures as are produced each by its peculiar seed, constitute a distinct propagable sort of creatures. Boyle.
TO PROPAGATE. v. a. [propago, Latin.]
  1. To continue or spread by generation or successive production:
All that I eat, or drink, or shall beget,
Is propagated curle! Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
Is it an elder brother's duty to
To propagate his family and name;
You would not have yours die and buried with you? Oswald.
From hills and dales the cheerful cries rebound;
For echo hunts along, and propagates the sound. Dryden.
2. To extend; to widen.
I have upon a high and pleasant hill
Feign'd fortune to be thron'd; the base o' th' mount
Is rank'd with all deserts, all kind of natures,
That labour on the bosom of this sphere
To propagate their fates. Shakespeare, Timon of Athens.
3. To carry on from place to place; to promote.
Some have thought the propagating of religion by arms not only lawful, but meritorious. Decay of Piety.
Who are those that truth must propagate,
Within the confines of my father's state. Dryden.
Those who seek truth only, and desire to propagate nothing else, freely expose their principles to the test. Locke.
Because dense bodies conserve their heat a long time, and the densest bodies conserve their heat the longest, the vibrations of their parts are of a lasting nature; and therefore may be propagated along solid fibres of uniform dense matter to a great distance, for conveying into the brain the impressions made upon all the organs of sense. Newton.
4. To encrease; to promote.
Griefs of mine own lie heavy in my breast,
Which thou wilt propagate, to have them prest
With more of thine. Shakespeare.
Sooth'd with his future fame,
And pleas'd to hear his propagated name. Dryden.
5. To generate.
Superstitious notions, propagated in fancy, are hardly ever totally eradicated. Clarissa.
TO PROPAGATE. v. n. To have offspring.
No need that thou
Should'st propagate, already infinite,
And through all numbers absolute, though one. Milton.
PROPAGATION. n. f. [propagatio, Lat. propagation, Fr. from propagare.] Continuance or diffusion by generation or successive production.
Men have souls rather by creation than propagation. Hooker.
There are other secondary ways of the propagation of it, as lying in the same bed. Wifeman's Surgery.
There is not in all nature any spontaneous generation, but all come by propagation, wherein chance hath not the least part. Ray on the Creation.
Old stakes of olive trees in plants revive;
But nobler vines by propagation thrive. Dryden.
PROPAGATOR. n. f. [from propagate.]
    1. One who continues by successive production.
2. A spreader; a promoter.
Socrates, the greatest propagator of morality, and a martyr for the unity of the Godhead, was so famous for this talent, that he gained the name of the Drole. Addison.
TO PROPEL. v. a. [propelle, Lat.] To drive forward.
Avicen witnesses the blood to be frothy: that is propelled out of a vein of the breast. Harvey.

This motion, in some human creatures, may be weak in respect to the viscosity of what is taken, so as not to be able to propel it. Arbutnot on Aliments.
That overplus of motion would be too feeble and languid to propel so vast and ponderous a body, with that prodigious velocity. Bentley's Sermons.
To PROPEND. v. n. [propendo, Lat. to hang forwards.] To incline to any part; to be disposed in favour of any thing. My sprightly brethren, I propend in favour of any thing. In resolution to keep Helen still. Shakefp.
PROPENSITY. n. f. [from propend.] 1. Inclination or tendency of desire to any thing. 2. [From propendo, Lat. to weigh.] Preconsideration; attentive deliberation; propensity. An act above the animal actions, which are transient, and admit not of that attention, and propensity of actions. Hale.
PROPENSE. adj. [propensus, Lat.] Inclined; disposed. It is used both of good and bad. Women, propense and inclinable to holiness, be otherwise edified in good things, rather than carried away as captives. Hooker's Preface.
I have brought scandal In feeble hearts, propense enough before To waver, or fall off, and join with idols. Milton.
PROPENSION. n. f. [propension, Fr. propensio, Lat. from PROPENSITY.] propense. 1. Inclination; disposition to any thing good or bad. Some miscarriages might escape, rather through necessities of state, than any propensity of myself to injuriousness. K. Char. So forcible are our propensions to mutiny, that we equally take occasions from benefits or injuries. Gov. of the Tongue. Let there be but propensity, and bent of will to religion, and there will be sedulity and indefatigable industry. South. It requires a critical nicety to find out the genius or the propensions of a child. L'Estrange. The natural propension, and the inevitable occasions of complaint, accidents of fortune. Temple. He affixes us with a measure of grace, sufficient to overbalance the corrupt propensity of the will. Rogers. 2. Tendency. Bodies, that of themselves have no propensions to any determinate place, do nevertheless move constantly and perpetually one way. Digby. This great attrition must produce a great propensity to the putrescent alkaline condition of the fluids. Arbutnot.
PROPER. adj. [proprie, Fr. proprius, Latin.] 1. Peculiar; not belonging to more; not common. As for the virtues that belong unto moral righteousness and honesty of life, we do not mention them, because they are not proper unto christian men as they are christian, but do concern them as they are men. Hooker. Men of learning hold it for a slip in judgment, when offer is made to demonstrate that as proper to one thing, which reason findeth common unto many. Hooker. No sense the precious joys conceives, Which in her private contemplations be; For then the ravish'd spirit the senses leaves, Hath her own pow'rs, and proper actions free. Davies. Of nought no creature ever formed ought, For that is proper to th' Almighty's hand. Davies. Duffrey's rules, concerning the posture of the figures, are almost wholly proper to paintings, and admit not any comparison with poetry. Dryden's Duffrey. Outward objects, that are extrinsic to the mind, and its own operations, proceeding from powers intrinsic and proper to itself, which become also objects of its contemplation, are the original of all knowledge. Locke. 2. Noting an individual. A proper name may become common, when given to several beings of the same kind; as Caesar. Watts. 3. One's own. It is joined with any of the possessives: as, my proper, their proper. The bloody book of law You shall yourself read in the bitter letter, After your own sense; yea, though our proper son stood in your action. Shakefp. Othello. Court the age With somewhat of your proper rage. Waller. If we might determine it, our proper conceptions would be all voted axioms. Glanvil's Sceps. Now learn the difference at your proper cost, Betwixt true valour and an empty boast. Dryden. 4. Natural; original. In our proper motion we ascend Up to our native seat. Milton. 5. Fit; accommodated; adapted; suitable; qualified. In Athens all was pleasure, mirth and play, All proper to the spring, and sprightly May. Dryden. He is the only proper person of all others for an Epic poem, who, to his natural endowments of a large invention, a ripe judgment, and a strong memory, has joined the knowledge of the liberal arts. Dryden.

In debility, from great loss of blood, wine and all aliment, that is easily assimilated or turned into blood, are proper; for blood is required to make blood. Arbutnot.
6. Exact; accurate; just. 7. Not figurative. Those parts of nature, into which the chaos was divided, they signified by dark names, which we have expressed in their plain and proper terms. Burnet's Theory of the Earth. 8. It seems in Shakefp. to signify, mere; pure. See thyself, devil! Proper deformity seems not in the fiend So horrid as in woman. Shakefp. King Lear. 9. [From proprie, Fr.] Elegant; pretty. Moses was a proper child. Heb. xi. 23. 10. Tall; luffy; handsome with bulk. At last the concluded with a sigh, thou wast the properest man in Italy. Shakefp. A proper goodly fox was carrying to execution. L'Estrange.
PROPERLY. adv. [from proper.] 1. Fitly; suitably. 2. In a strict sense. What dies but what has life And fin? the body properly hath neither. Milton. The miseries of life are not properly owing to the unequal distribution of things. Swift. There is a sense in which the works of every man, good as well as bad, are properly his own. Rogers.
PROPERNESS. n. f. [from proper.] 1. The quality of being proper. 2. Tallness. PROPERTY. n. f. [from proper.] 1. Peculiar quality. What special property or quality is that, which being no where found but in sermons, maketh them effectual to save souls? Hooker, b. v. 22. A secondary essential mode, is any attribute of a thing, which is not of primary consideration, and is called a property. Watts. 2. Quality; disposition. 'Tis conviction, not force, that must induce assent; and sure the logic of a conquering sword has no great property that way; silence it may, but convince it cannot. D. of Pitt. It is the property of an old farmer to find delight in reviewing his own villanies in others. South's Sermons. 3. Right of possession. Some have been deceived into an opinion, that the inheritance of rule over men, and property in things, sprung from the same original, and were to descend by the same rules. Locke. Property, whose original is from the right a man has to use any of the inferior creatures, for subsistence and comfort, is for the sole advantage of the proprietor, so that he may even destroy the thing that he has property in. Locke. 4. Possession held in one's own right. For numerous blessings yearly show'd, And property with plenty crown'd, Accept our pious praise. Dryden. 5. The thing possessed. 'Tis a thing impossible I should love thee but as a property. Shakefp. No wonder such men are true to a government, where liberty runs so high, where property is so well secured. Swift. 6. Nearness or right. I know not which is the sense in the following lines. Here I disclaim all my paternal care, Propinquity, and property of blood, And as a stranger to my heart and me, Hold thee. Shakefp. King Lear. 7. Something useful; an appendage. I will draw a bill of properties, such as our play wants. Shakefp. Midsummer's Night's Dream. The purple garments raise the lawyer's fees, High pomp and state are useful properties. Dryden. Greenfield was the name of the property man in that time, who furnished implements for the actors. Pope. 8. Property for propriety. Any thing peculiarly adapted. Our poets excel in grandity and gravity, smoothness and property, in quickness and briefness. Candem.
TO PROPERTY. v. a. [from the noun.] 1. To invest with qualities. His rear'd arm Crested the world; his voice was properly'd As all the tuned spheres. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleop. 2. To seize or retain as something owned, or in which one has a right; to appropriate; to hold. This word is not now used in either meaning. His large fortune Subdues and properties to his love and tendance All sorts of hearts. Shakefp. Timon of Athens. They have here properly'd me, keep me in darkness, and do all they can to face me out of my wits. Shakefp. I am too highborn to be properly'd, To be a secondary at controul. Shakefp. King John.

Strange screams of death, And prophesying with accents terrible Of dire combustion. Shakefp. Receiv'd by thee, I prophesy, my rhimes, Mix'd with thy works, their life no bounds shall see. Tick. 2. To preach. A scriptural sense. Prophecy unto the wind, prophesy, son of man. Ezekiel. The elders of the Jews builded, and prospered through the prophesying of Haggai. Ezra vi. 14. PROPHET. n. f. [προφήτης, Fr. prophete.] 1. One who tells future events; a predictor; a foreteller. Did as a prophet weep what it forelaw, In Hector's wrath. Shakefp. Troilus and Cressida. Jesters oft prove prophets. Shakefp. King Lear. O prophet of glad tidings! finisher Of utmost hope! He lov'd so fast, As if he fear'd each day wou'd be her last; Too true a prophet to foresee the fate, That should so soon divide their happy state. Dryden. God, when he makes the prophet, does not unmake the man. Locke. 2. One of the sacred writers empowered by God to foretell futurity. His champions are the prophets and apostles. Shakefp. PROPHECY. n. f. [propheteia, Fr. from prophet.] A woman that foretells future events. He shall split thy very heart with sorrow, And say poor Marg'ret was a prophetess. Shakefp. That it is consonant to the word of God, so in facing to answer, the practice of Miriam the prophetess, when she answered the man in her song, will approve. Peacham. If my love but once were crown'd, Fair prophecies, my grief would cease. Prior. PROPHE'TICK. adj. [prophetique, Fr. from prophet.] PROPHE'TICAL. adj. [from prophet.] 1. Foretelling or foretelling future events. Say, why Upon this blasted heath you stop our way, With such prophetic greeting. Shakefp. Macbeth. The counsel of a wife and then prophetic friend was forgotten. Wotton. Some perfumes procure prophetic dreams. Bacon. 'Till old experience do attain To something like prophetic strain. Milton. Some famous prophetic pictures represent the fate of England by a mole, a creature blind and busy, smooth and deceitful, continually working under ground, but now and then to be discerned in the surface. Stillingfleet. No arguments made a stronger impression on these Pagan converts, than the predictions relating to our Saviour in those old prophetic writings deposited among the hands of the greatest enemies to christianity, and owned by them to have been extant many ages before his appearance. Addison. 2. It has of before the thing foretold. The more I know, the more my fears augment, And fears are oft prophetic of th' event. Dryden. PROPHE'TICALLY. adv. [from prophetic.] With knowledge of futurity; in manner of a prophecy. He is so prophetically proud of an heroic coddgelling, that he raves in saying nothing. Shakefp. Troilus and Cressida. This great success among Jews and Gentiles, part of it historically true at the compiling of these articles, and part of it prophetically true then, and fulfilled afterward, was a most effectual argument to give authority to this faith. Hammond. She sigh'd, and thus prophetically spoke. Dryden. TO PROPHE'TIZE. v. n. [prophetize, Fr. from prophet.] To give predictions.

PRO

Nature else hath conference With profound sleep, and to doth warning send By prophesizing dreams. Daniel's Civil War. PROPHYLACTICK. adj. [προφυλακτικός, from προφύλασσω.] Preventive; preservative. Medicine is distributed into prophylactick, or the art of preserving health; and therapeutick, or the art of restoring health. Watts's Logick. PROPINQUITY. n. f. [propinquitas, Lat.] 1. Nearness; proximity; neighbourhood. They draw the retina nearer to the crystalline humour, and by their relaxation suffer it to return to its natural distance according to the exigency of the object, in respect of distance or propinquity. Ray on the Creation. 2. Nearness of time. Thereby was declared the propinquity of their desolations, and that their tranquillity was of no longer duration, than those soon decaying fruits of summer. Brown. 3. Kindred; nearness of blood. Here I disclaim all my paternal care, Propinquity, and property of blood, And as a stranger to my heart and me Hold thee. Shakefp. King Lear. PROPITIABLE. adj. [from propitiare.] Such as may be induced to favour; such as may be made propitious. To PROPITIATE. v. a. [propitius, Lat.] To induce to favour; to gain; to conciliate; to make propitious. You, her priest, declare What off'rings may propitiate the fair, Rich orient pearl, bright stones that ne'er decay, Or polish'd lines which longer last than they. Waller. They believe the affairs of human life to be managed by certain spirits under him, whom they endeavour to propitiate by certain rites. Stillingfleet. Vengeance shall pursue the inhuman coast, 'Till they propitiate thy offended ghost. Dryden. Let fierce Achilles, dreadful in his rage, The God propitiate, and the pest alluage. Pope. PROPITIATION. n. f. [propitiation, Fr. from propitiare.] 1. The act of making propitious. 2. The atonement; the offering by which propitioufness is obtained. He is the propitiation for the sins of the whole world. 1 Jo. PROPITIATOR. n. f. [from propitiare.] One that propitiates. PROPITIATORY. adj. [propitiatoire, Fr. from propitiare.] Having the power to make propitious. Is not this more than giving God thanks for their virtues, when a propitiatory sacrifice is offered for their honour? Stilling. PROPITIOUS. adj. [propitius, Lat. propice, Fr.] Favourable; kind. 'T' affluage the force of this new flame, And make thee more propitious in my need, I mean to sing the praises of thy name. Spenser. Let not my words offend thee, My maker, be propitious while I speak! Milton. Indulgent God! propitious pow'r to Troy, Swift to relieve, unwilling to destroy. Dryden. Would but thy sister Marcia be propitious To thy friend's vows. Addison's Cato. Ere Phœbus rose, he had implor'd Propitious heav'n. Pope's Rape of the Lock. PROPITIOUSLY. adv. [from propitius.] Favourably; kindly. So when a muse propitioufly invites, Improve her favours, and indulge her flights. Roscommon. PROPITIOUSNESS. n. f. [from propitius.] Favourableness; kindness. All these joined with the propitioufness of climate to that sort of tree and the length of age it shall stand and grow, may produce an oak. Temple. PROPLASM. n. f. [πρόπλασμα.] Mould; matrix. Those shells serving as proplasms or moulds to the matter which so filled them, limited and determined its dimensions and figure. Woodward's Nat. Hist. PROPLASTICE. n. f. [προπλαστική.] The art of making moulds for casting. PROPONENT. n. f. [proponens, Lat.] One that makes a proposal. For mysterious things of faith rely On the propONENT, heaven's authority. Dryden. PROPORTION. n. f. [proportion, Fr. proportio, Lat.] 1. Comparative relation of one thing to another; ratio. Let any man's wisdom determine by lessening the territory, and increasing the number of inhabitants, what proportion is requisite to the peopling of a region in such a manner, that the land shall be neither too narrow for those whom it feedeth, nor capable of a greater multitude. Raleigh. By proportion to these rules, we may judge of the obligation that lies upon all sorts of injurious persons. Taylor. Things high equivalent and neighbourly value By lot are parted; but high heav'n thy share, In equal balance weigh'd 'gainst earth and hell, Flings up the adverse scale, and thuns proportion. Prior. 2. Settled

PRO

2. Settled relation of comparative quantity; equal degree:
Greater visible good does not always raise men's desires, in proportion to the greatness it is acknowledged to have, though every little trouble sets us on work to get rid of it. Locke.
He must be little skilled in the world, who thinks that men's talking much or little shall hold proportion only to their knowledge. Locke.
Several nations are recovered out of their ignorance, in proportion as they converse more or less with those of the reformed churches. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
In proportion as this resolution grew, the terrors before us seemed to vanish. Tatler, N° 81.
3. Harmonick degree.
His volant touch
Instinct through all proportions, low and high, Fled, and pur'd transverse the resonant fugue. Milton.
4. Symmetry; adaptation of one to another.
It must be mutual in proportion due Giv'n and receiv'd. Milton.
No man of the present age is equal in the strength, proportion and knitting of his limbs to the Hercules of Farnese. Dryden's Dufresney.
The proportions are so well observed, that nothing appears to an advantage, or distinguishes itself above the rest. Addison.
Harmony, with ev'ry grace,
Plays in the fair proportions of her face. Mrs. Carter.
5. Form; size.
All things receiv'd, do such proportion take,
As those things have, wherein they are receiv'd;
So little glasses little faces make,
And narrow webs on narrow frames are weav'd. Davies.
To PROPORTION. v. a. [from proportionner, Fr. from the noun.]
1. To adjust by comparative relation.
Measure is that which perfecteth all things, because every thing is for some end; neither can that thing be available to any end, which is not proportionable therunto: and to proportion as well excesses as defects, are opposite. Hooker.
Till body up to spirit work, in bounds
Proportion'd to each kind. Milton.
In the loss of an object, we do not proportion our grief to the real value it bears, but to the value our fancies set upon it. Addison's Spectator, N° 236.
2. To form symmetrically.
Nature had proportioned her without any fault, quickly to be discovered by the senses; yet altogether seem'd not to make up that harmony that Cupid delights in. Sidney.
PROPORTIONABLE. adj. [from proportion.] Adjusted by comparative relation; such as is fit.
His commandments are not grievous, because he offers us an assistance proportionable to the difficulty. Tillotson.
It was enlivened with an hundred and twenty trumpets, assisted with a proportionable number of other instruments. Add.
PROPORTIONABLY. adv. [from proportion.] According to proportion; according to comparative relations.
The mind ought to examine all the grounds of probability, and upon a due balancing the whole, reject or receive it proportionably to the preponderancy of the greater grounds of probability, on one side or the other. Locke.
The parts of a great thing are great, and there are proportionably large estates in a large country. Arbutnot.
Though religion be more eminently necessary to those in stations of authority, yet these qualities are proportionably conducive to publick happiness in every inferior relation. Rogers.
PROPORTIONAL. adj. [from proportion, Fr. from proportion.] Having a settled comparative relation; having a certain degree of any quality compared with something else.
As likely falling to attain Proportional ascent, which cannot be
But to be gods or angels. Milton's Par. Lost.
Four numbers are said to be proportional, when the first containeth, or is contained by the second, as often as the third containeth, or is contained by the fourth. Cocker.
If light be swifter in bodies than in vacuo in the proportion of the lines which measure the refraction of the bodies, the forces of the bodies to reflect and refract light, are very nearly proportional to the densities of the same bodies. Newton.
PROPORTIONALITY. n. f. [from proportional.] The quality of being proportional.
All sense, as grateful, dependeth upon the equality or the proportionality of the motion or impression made. Grew.
PROPORTIONALLY. adv. [from proportional.] In a stated degree.
If these circles, whilst their centres keep their distances and positions, could be made less in diameter, their interfering one with another, and by consequence the mixture of the heterogeneous rays would be proportionally diminished. Newton.
PROPORTIONATE. adj. [from proportion.] Adjusted to something else, according to a certain rate or comparative relation.
The connection between the end and any means is adequate, but between the end and means proportionate. Grew.
The use of spectacles, by an adequate connection of truths, gave men occasion to think of microscopes and telescopes;

PRO

- but the invention of burning glasses depended on a proportionate; for that figure, which contracts the species of any body, that is, the rays by which it is seen, will, in the same proportion, contract the heat wherewith the rays are accompanied. Grew's Casuel.
In the state of nature, one man comes by no absolute power, to use a criminal according to the passion or heats of his own will; but only to retribute to him, so far as conscience dictates, what is proportionate to his transgression. Locke.
To PROPORTIONATE. v. a. [from proportion.] To adjust, according to settled rates, to something else.
The parallelism and due proportionate inclination of the axis of the earth. Moré's Divine Dialogues.
Since every single particle hath an innate gravitation toward all others, proportionate by matter and distance, it evidently appears, that the outward atoms of the chaos would necessarily tend inwards, and descend from all quarters towards the middle of the whole space. Brutley's Sermon.
PROPORTIONATENESS. n. f. [from proportionate.] The state of being by comparison adjusted.
By this congruity of those faculties to their proper objects, and by the fitness and proportionateness of these objective impressions upon their respective faculties, accommodated to their reception, the sensible nature hath so much of perception, as is necessary for its sensible being. Hale.
PROPOSAL. n. f. [from proposer.]
1. Scheme or design propounded to consideration or acceptance.
If our proposals once again were heard,
We should compel them to a quick result. Milton.
The work, you mention, will sufficiently recommend itself, when your name appears with the proposals. Add. to P.
2. Offer to the mind.
Upon the proposal of an agreeable object, a man's choice will rather incline him to accept than refuse it. South.
This truth is not likely to be entertained readily upon the first proposal. Atterbury.
To PROPOSE. v. a. [from proposer, Fr. proposer, Lat.] To offer to the consideration.
Raphael to Adam's doubt propos'd Benevolent and facit thus reply'd. Milton.
My design is to treat only of those, who have chiefly propos'd to themselves the latter as the principal reward of their labours. Tatler, N° 81.
In learning any thing, there should be as little as possible first propos'd to the mind at once, and that being understood, proceed then to the next adjoining part. Watts.
To PROPOSE. v. n. To lay schemes. Not in use.
Run thee into the parlour,
There shalt thou find my cousin Beatrice, Proposing with the prince and Claudio. Shakesp.
PROPOSER. n. f. [from proposer.] One that offers any thing to consideration.
Faith is the assent to any proposition, not made out by the deductions of reason, but upon the credit of the proposer, as coming from God. Locke.
He provided a statute, that whoever propos'd any alteration to be made, should do it with a rope about his neck; if the matter propos'd were generally approved, then it should pass into a law; if it went in the negative, the proposer to be immediately hanged. Swift.
PROPOSITION. n. f. [from proposition, Fr. proposition, Lat.]
1. A sentence in which any thing is affirmed or decreed.
Chrysippus, labouring how to reconcile these two propositions, that all things are done by fate, and yet that something is in our own power, cannot extricate himself. Hammond.
The compounding of the representation of things, with an affirmation or negation, makes a proposition. Hale.
2. Proposal; offer of terms.
The enemy sent propositions, such as upon delivery of a strong fortified town, after a handsome defence, are usually granted. Clarendon.
PROPOSITIONAL. adj. [from proposition.] Considered as a proposition.
If it has a singular subject in its propositional sense, it is always ranked with universals. Watts's Logic.
To PROPOUND. v. a. [from propono, Lat.]
1. To offer to consideration; to propose.
The parliament, which now is held, decreed
Whatever pleas'd the king but to propound.
To leave as little as I may unto fancy, which is wild and irregular, I will propound a rule. Watson.
Dar'st thou to the son of God propound
To worship thee.
The greatest stranger must propound the argument. Moré.
The arguments, which christianity propounds to us, are reasonable encouragements to bear sufferings patiently. Tillotson.
2. To offer; to exhibit.
A spirit rais'd from depth of under-ground,
That shall make answer to such questions,
As by your grace shall be propounded him. Shakesp.
PROPOUNDER. n. f. [from propono.] He that propounds; he that offers; proposer.
PROPRIETARY.

PRO

- PROPRIETARY. n. f. [from propriétaire, Fr. from propriety.] Possessor in his own right.
'Tis a great mistake to think ourselves stewards in some of God's gifts, and proprietaries in others; they are all equally to be employed, according to the designation of the donor. Government of the Tongue.
PROPRIETARY. adj. Belonging to a certain owner.
Though sheep, which are proprietary, are seldom marked, yet they are not apt to straggle. Grew's Casuel.
PROPRIETOR. n. f. [from proprius, Lat.] A possessor in his own right.
Man, by being master of himself, and proprietor of his own person, and the actions or labour of it, had still in himself the great foundation of property. Locke.
Though they are scattered on the wings of the morning, and remain in the uttermost parts of the sea, even there shall his right hand fetch them out, and lead them home to their ancient proprietor. Rogers.
PROPRIETRESS. n. f. [from proprieta.] A female possessor in her own right; a mistress.
A big-bellied bitch borrowed another bitch's kennel to lay her burthen in; the proprietress demanded possession, but the other begged her excuse. L'Estrange.
PROPRIETY. n. f. [from proprietas, Fr. proprietas, Lat.]
1. Peculiarity of possession; exclusive right.
You that have promis'd to yourselves propriety in love,
Know womens hearts like draws do move.
Benefit of peace, and vacation for piety, render it necessary by laws to secure propriety. Hammond.
Hail wedded love! mysterious law, true source
Of human offspring, sole propriety
In Paradise! of all things common else. Milton.
They secure propriety and peace. Dryden.
To that we owe not only the safety of our persons and the propriety of our possessions, but our improvement in the several arts. Atterbury.
2. Accuracy; justness.
Common use, that is the rule of propriety, affords some aid to settle the signification of language. Locke.
PROPT, for PROPT. [from prop.] Sustained by some prop.
See in her cell sad Eloisa spread,
Propt in some tomb, a neighbour of the dead. Pope.
To PROPUGN. v. a. [from propugno, Lat.] To defend; to vindicate.
Thankfulness is our sweet tribute to those sacred champions for propagating of our faith. Hammond.
PROPUGNATION. n. f. [from propugnatio, from propugno, Latin.] Defence.
What propagation is in one man's valour,
To stand the push and enmity of those
This quarrel would excite? Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.
PROPUGNER. n. f. [from propugno.] A defender.
So zealous propagators are they of their native creed, that they are importunately diligent to instruct men in it, and in all the little sophistries for defending it. G. v. of the Tongue.
PROPULSION. n. f. [from propulsus, Lat.] The act of driving forward.
Joy worketh by propulsus of the moisture of the brain, when the spirits dilate and occupy more room. Bacon.
The evanescent solid and fluid will scarce differ, and the extremities of those small canals will by propulsus be carried off with the fluid continually. Arbutnot on Aliments.
PROPE. n. f. [from prope, Lat.] The prow; the forepart of the ship. A poetical word used for a rhyme.
There no vessel, with vermilion prope,
Or bark of traffick, glides from shore to shore. Pope.
PROPRIGATION. n. f. [from proprigatio, from proprigo, Lat. proprigatio, Fr.]
1. Continuance; state of lengthening out to a distant time; prolongation.
The fulness and effluence of man's enjoyments in the state of innocence, might seem to leave no place for hope, in respect of any farther addition, but only of the proprigation and future continuance of what already he possessed. South.
2. Interruption of the session of parliament by the regal authority.
It would seem extraordinary, if an inferior court should take a matter out of the hands of the high court of parliament, during a proprigation. Swift.
To PROPRIGUE. v. a. [from proprigo, Lat. proprigo, Fr.]
1. To protract; to prolong.
He proprigued his government, still threatening to dismiss himself from publick cares. Dryden.
2. To put off; to delay.
My life were better ended by their hate,
Than death proprigued, wanting of thy love. Shakesp.
3. To interrupt the session of parliament to a distant time.
By the king's authority alone, they are assembled, and by him alone are they proprigued and dissolved, but each house may adjourn itself.
PROPRUPTION. n. f. [from propruption, from propruptione, Lat.] The act of burrowing out.

PRO

- Others ground this disruption upon their continued or protracted time of delivery, whereat, excluding but one day, the latter brood impatient by a forcible pruraption anticipates their period of exclusion. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PROSA'ICK. adj. [from prosaïque, Fr. prosaïque, from prosa, Lat.] Belonging to prose; resembling prose.
To PROSCRIBE. v. a. [from proscribo, Lat.]
1. To censure caputally; to doom to destruction.
Robert Vere, earl of Oxford, through the malice of the peers, was banished the realm, and proscribed. Spenser.
I hid for thee
Thy murder of thy brother, being so brib'd,
And writ him in the list of my proscrib'd
After thy fact. Benj. Johnson.
Follow'd and pointed at by fools and boys,
But dreaded and proscrib'd by men of sense. Roscommon.
Some utterly proscribe the name of chance, as a word of impious and profane signification; and indeed if taken by us in that sense, in which it was used by the heathen, so as to make any thing casual, in respect of God himself, their exception ought justly to be admitted. South's Sermons.
2. To interdict. Not in use.
He shall be found,
And taken or proscrib'd this happy ground. Dryden.
PROSCRIBER. n. f. [from proscribo.] One that dooms to destruction.
The triumvir and proscriber had defended to us in a more hideous form, if the emperor had not taken care to make friends of Virgil and Horace. Dryden.
PROSCRIPTION. n. f. [from proscriptio, Lat.] Doom to death or confiscation.
You took his voice who should be prick'd to die,
In our black sentence and proscription. Shakesp.
Sylla's old troops
Are needy and poor; and have but left t' expect From Catiline new bills and new proscriptions. B. J. hnsf.
For the title of proscriptio or forfeiture, the emperor hath been judge and party, and justified himself. Bacon.
PROSE. n. f. [from prosa, Fr. prosa, Lat.] Language not restrained to harmonick sounds or set number of syllables; discourse not metrical.
Things unattempted yet in prose or rhyme. Milton.
The reformation of prose was owing to Boccace, who is the standard of purity in the Italian tongue, though many of his phrases are become obsolete. Dryden.
A poet lets you into the knowledge of a device better than a prose writer, as his descriptions are often more diffuse. Add.
Prose men alone for private ends,
I thought, forsook their ancient friends. Prior.
I will be still your friend in prose:
Esteem and friendship to express,
Will not require poetick dress. Swift.
My head and heart thus flowing through my quill,
Verse man and prose man, term me which you will. Pope.
To PROSECUTE. v. a. [from prosequor, prosecutus, Lat.]
1. To pursue; to continue endeavours after any thing.
I am belov'd of beauteous Hermia,
Why should not I then prosecute my right?
I must not omit a father's timely care,
To prosecute the means of thy deliverance
By ransom. Milton's Agonistes.
He prosecuted this purpose with strength of argument and close reasoning, without incoherent fallies. Locke.
2. To continue; to carry on.
The same reasons, which induced you to entertain this war, will induce you also to prosecute the same. Hayward.
All resolute to prosecute their ire,
Seeking their own and country's cause to free. Daniel.
He indicted Oxford, which gave them the more reason to prosecute the fortifications. Clarendon.
With louder cries
She prosecutes her griefs, and thus replies. Dryden.
3. To proceed in consideration or disquisition of any thing.
It were an infinite labour to prosecute those things, so far as they might be exemplified in religious and civil actions. Hooker, b. iv. f. 1.
4. To pursue by law; to sue criminally.
5. To prosecute differs from to persecute: to persecute always implies some cruelty, malignity or injustice; to prosecute, is to proceed by legal measures, either with or without just cause.
PROSECUTION. n. f. [from prosecute.]
1. Persecution; endeavour to carry on.
Many offer at the effects of friendship, but they do not last; they are promising in the beginning, but they fail, jade, and tire in the prosecution. South.
Their jealousy of the British power, as well as their prosecutions of commerce and pursuits of universal monarchy, will fix them in their averfions towards us. Addison.
2. Suit against a man in a criminal cause.
PROSECUTOR. n. f. [from prosecute.] One that carries on any thing; a pursuer of any purpose; one who pursues another by law in a criminal cause.
20 Q PROSELYTE.

PRO

PROSELYTE. n. f. [πρωσληύτης; proslite, Fr.] A convert; one brought over to a new opinion.
He that saw hell in his melancholy dream,
Scar'd from his sins, repented in a fright,
Had he view'd Scotland, had turn'd proslite. Cleaveland.
Men become professors and combatants for those opinions they were never convinced of, nor proslites to. Locke.
Where'er you tread,
Millions of proslites behind are led,
Through crowds of new-made converts still you go. Granov.
What numbers of proslites may we not expect. Addison.
TO PROSELYTE. v. a. To convert. A bad word.
Men of this temper cut themselves off from the opportunities of proslighting others, by averting them from their company. Government of the Tongue.
PROSEMINATION. n. f. [prosemino, proseminatus, Lat.] Propagation by seed.
Touching the impossibility of the eternal succession of men, animals or vegetables by natural propagation or prosemination, the reasons thereof shall be delivered. Hale.
PROSO'DIAN. n. f. [from proso'dy] One skilled in metre or prosody.
Some have been so bad proso'dians, as from thence to derive malum, because that fruit was the first occasion of evil. Brown.
PROSODY. n. f. [proso'dia, Fr. προσώδια.] The part of grammar which teaches the sound and quantity of syllables, and the measures of verse.
PROSOPŌGIA. n. f. [πρὸς ὀπώγεια; proso'pogē, Fr.] Personification; figure by which things are made persons.
These reasons are pathetically urged, and admirably raised by the proso'pogē of nature speaking to her children. Dryden.
PROSPECT. n. f. [prospectus, Lat.]
1. View of something distant.
Eden and all the coast in prospect lay. Milton.
The Jews being under the economy of immediate revelation, might be supposed to have had a freer prospect into that heaven, whence their law descended. Decay of Piety.
It is better to marry than to burn, says St. Paul; a little burning felt pushes us more powerfully, than greater pleasures in prospect allure. Locke.
2. Place which affords an extended view.
Him God beholding from his prospect high,
Wherein past, present, future he beholds,
Thus spake. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iii.
3. Series of objects open to the eye.
There is a very noble prospect from this place: on the one side lies a vast extent of seas, that runs abroad further than the eye can reach: just opposite stands the green promontory of Surrentum, and on the other side the whole circuit of the bay of Naples. Addison.
4. Object of view.
Man to himself
Is a large prospect, rais'd above the level
Of his low creeping thoughts. Denham.
Present, sad prospect! can he ought deservy,
But what affects his melancholy eye;
The beauties of the ancient fabrick lost
In chains of craggy hills, or lengths of dreary coast. Prior.
5. View into futurity: opposed to retrospect.
To be king,
Stands not within the prospect of belief,
No more than to be Cawdor. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
To him, who hath a prospect of the different state of perfect happiness or misery, that attends all men after this life, the measures of good and evil are mightily changed. Locke.
If there be no prospect beyond the grave, the inference is right; let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we shall die. Locke.
Against himself his gratitude maintain'd,
By favours past, not future prospect gain'd. Smith.
6. Regard to something future.
Is he a prudent man, as to his temporal estate, that lays designs only for a day, without any prospect to, or provision for the remaining part of his life. Tillotson.
TO PROSPECT. v. a. [prospectus, Lat.] To look forward. Dict.
PROSPECTIVE. adj. [from prospect.]
1. Viewing at a distance.
The French king and king of Sweden are circumpect, industrious and prospective too in this affair. Child.
TO PROSPER. v. a. [prosperare, Lat.] To make happy; to favour.
Kind gods, forgive
Me that, and prosper him. Shakespeare. King Lear.
All things concur to prosper our design;
All things to prosper any love but mine. Dryden.
TO PROSPER. v. n. [prosperare, Fr.]
1. To be prosperous; to be successful.
My word shall not return void, but accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereof I sent it. If.
This man encreased by little and little, and things prosp- ered with him more and more. 2 Macc. viii. 8.
Surer to prosper, than prosperity
Could have assur'd us. Milton.

PRO

2. To thrive; to come forward.
All things do prosper best, when they are advanced to the better; a nursery of flocks ought to be in a more barren ground, than that whereunto you remove them. Bacon.
The plants, which he had set, did thrive and prosper. Cowley.
She visits how they prosper'd, bud, and bloom. Milton.
PROSPERITY. n. f. [prosperitas, Lat. prosperité, Fr.] Success; attainment of wishes; good fortune.
Prosperity, in regard of our corrupt inclination to abuse the blessings of Almighty God, doth prove a thing dangerous to the souls of men. Hooker, b. v. l. 48.
God's justice reaps that glory in our calamities, which we robbed him of in our prosperity. King Charles.
PROSPEROUS. adj. [prosperus, Lat.] Successful; fortunate.
Your good advice, which still hath been both grave
And prosperous. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
Either state to bear prosperous or adverse.
May he find
A happy passage, and a prosperous wind. Denham.
PROSPEROUSLY. adv. [from prosperus.] Successfully; fortunately.
Prosperously I have attempted,
With bloody passage led your wars, even to The gates of Rome. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
In 1596, was the second invasion upon the main territories of Spain, prosperously achieved by Robert earl of Essex, in confort with the earl of Nottingham. Bacon.
Those, who are prosperously unjust, are intitled to panegy-rick, but afflicted virtue is stabbed with reproaches. Dryden.
PROSPEROUSNESS. n. f. [from prosperus.] Prosperity.
PROSPICIENCE. n. f. [from prospicio, Lat.] The act of looking forward.
PROSTERNATION. n. f. [from prosterno, Lat.] Dejection; depression; state of being cast down; act of calling down.
A word not to be adopted.
Pain interrupts the cure of ulcers, whence are stirred up a fever, watching, and prosternation of spirits. Wotton.
PROSTHESIS. n. f. [πρὸς ἑστῆς]. In surgery, that which fills up what is wanting, as when fistulous ulcers are filled up with flesh. Dict.
TO PROSTITUTE. v. a. [prostitutus, Lat. prostitutus, Fr.]
1. To sell to wickedness; to expose to crimes for a reward. It is commonly used of women sold to whoredom by others or themselves.
Do not prostitute thy daughter, to cause her to be a whore.
Lev. xix. 29.
Marrying or prostituting,
Rape or adultery. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
Who shall prevail with them to do that themselves which they beg of God, to spare his people and his heritage, to prostitute them more to their own sinister designs. D. of Pic.
Affections, consecrated to children, husbands, and parents, are vilely prostituted and thrown away upon a hand at loo. Add.
2. To expose upon vile terms.
It were unfit, that so excellent and glorious a reward, as the gospel promises, should stoop down like fruit upon a full laden bough, to be plucked by every idle and wanton hand, that heaven should be prostituted to slothful men. Tillotson.
PROSTITUTE. adj. [prostitutus, Lat.] Vicious for hire; sold to infamy or wickedness; sold to whoredom.
Their common loves, a lewd abandon'd pack,
By sloth corrupted, by disorder fed,
Made bold by want, and prostitute for bread. Prior.
PROSTITUTE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A hireling; a mercenary; one who is set to sale.
At openfullsome bawdry they rejoice,
Bale prostitute! thus dost thou gain thy bread. Dryden.
No hireling she, no prostitute to praise. Pope.
2. [Prostituta, Lat.] A publick-trumpet.
From every point they come,
Then dread no death of prostitute at Rome. Dryden.
PROSTITUTE. n. f. [prostitutio, Fr. from prostitute.]
1. The act of setting to sale; the state of being set to sale.
2. The life of a publick trumpet.
An infamous woman, having passed her youth in a most shameless state of prostitution, now gains her livelihood by seducing others. Addison's Spectator.
PROSTITUTE. adj. [prostitutus, Lat.] The accent was formerly on the first syllable.
1. Lying at length.
Once I saw with dread oppress'd
Her whom I dread; so that with prostitute lying,
Her length the earth in love's chief cloathing dress'd. Sidn.
He heard the western lords would undermine His city's wall, and lay his towers prostitute. Pope.
Before fair Britomart the fell prostitute. Spenser.
Groveling and prostitute on yon lake of fire. Milton.
2. Lying at mercy.
Look gracious on thy prostitute thrall. Shakespeare.
3. Thrown down in humblest adoration.
The warning found was no sooner heard, but the churches were filled, the pavements covered with bodies prostitute, and washed with tears of devout joy. Hooker.

PRO

Let us to the place
Repairing where he judg'd us, prostrate fall
Before him reverent; and there confess Humbly our faults, and pardon beg. Milton.
While prostrate here in humble grief I lie,
Kind virtuous drops just gath'ring in my eye. Pope.
TO PROSTRATE. v. a. [prostratus, Lat.]
1. To lay flat; to throw down.
In the streets many they slew, and fired divers places, pro- strating two parishes almost entirely. Hayward.
A storm that all things doth prostrate,
Finding a tree alone all comfortless,
Beats on it strongly, it to ruinate. Spenser.
Stake and bind up your weakest plants against the winds, before they come too fiercely, and in a moment prostrate a whole year's labour. Booclyn's Kalendar.
The drops falling thicker, faster, and with greater force, beating down the fruit from the trees, prostrating and laying corn growing in the fields. Hooker's Nat. Hist.
2. [Se prostratus, Fr.] To throw down in adoration.
Some have prostrated themselves an hundred times in the day, and as often in the night. Duppa.
PROSTRATION. n. f. [prostration, Fr. from prostrate.]
1. The act of falling down in adoration.
Nay is only a reliev'd prostration unto antiquity, a powerful enemy unto knowledge, but any confident adherence unto authority. Brown's Vulgar Errours.
The worship of the Gods had been kept up in temples, with altars, images, sacrifices, hymns and prostrations. Stilling.
The truths, they had subscribed to in speculation, they reverber'd by a brutish senseless devotion; managed with a greater prostration of reason than of body. Saunders's Sermons.
2. Dejection; depression.
A sudden prostration of strength or weakness attends this colick. Arbuthnot.
PROSTRATE. n. f. [prostrate, Fr. prostratus.] A building that has only pillars in the front. Dict.
PROSYLLOGISM. n. f. [pro and sylogism.]
A prosylogism is when two or more syllogisms are so connected together, that the conclusion of the former is the major or the minor of the following. Watts.
PROTASIS. n. f. [protasis, Fr. πρωσις.]
1. A maxim or proposition.
2. In the ancient drama, the first part of a comedy or tragedy that explains the argument of the piece. Dict.
PROTATICK. n. f. [protatikus, Fr. πρωτατικός.]
There are protatiks persons in the ancients, whom they use in their plays to hear or give the relation. Dryden.
TO PROTECT. v. a. [protectus, Lat. protector, Fr.] To defend; to cover from evil; to shield.
The king
Had virtuous uncles to protect his grace. Shakespeare.
Leave not the faithful side,
That gave thee being, still shades thee and protects. Milt.
Full in the midst of his own strength he stands,
Stretching his brawny arms and leamy hands,
His shade protects the plains. Dryden's Virgil.
PROTECTOR. n. f. [protector, Fr. from protect.]
1. Defence; shelter from evil.
Drive tow'rd Dover, friend, where thou shalt meet Both welcome and protection. Shakespeare. King Lear.
If the weak might find protection from the mighty, they could not with justice lament their condition. Swift.
2. A passport; exemption from being molested: as, we had a protection during the rebellion.
PROTECTIVE. adj. [from protect.] Defensive; sheltering.
The stately sailing swan guards his other ile,
Protective of his young. Thomson.
PROTECTOR. n. f. [protector, Fr. from protect.]
1. Defender; shelterer; supporter; one who shields from evil or oppression; guardian.
Hither th'oppressed shall henceforth resort,
Justice to crave, and succour at your court;
And then your highness, not for our's alone,
But for the world's protector shall be known. Waller.
The king of Spain, who is protector of the commonwealth, received information from the great duke. Addison.
2. An officer who had heretofore the care of the kingdom in the king's minority.
Is it concluded, he shall be protector?
—It is determin'd, not concluded yet. Shakespeare.
PROTECTOR. n. f. [protector, Fr. from protector.] A woman that protects.
All things should be guided by her direction, as the sovereign patroness and protectors of the enterprise. Bacon.
Behold those arts with a propitious eye,
That suppliant to their great protectors fly. Addison.
TO PROTRUDE. v. a. [protrude, Lat.] To hold out; to stretch forth.
All flood with their pretended spears prepar'd.
With his protruded lance he makes defence. Dryden.
PROTRUSIV. n. f. [protrusivus, Latin.] Peculiarity; petu-lance.

PRO

TO PROTEST. v. n. [protestor, Lat. protester, Fr.] To give a solemn declaration of opinion or resolution.
Here's the twin brother of thy letter; but let thine inherit first, for, I protest, mine never shall. Shakespeare.
The peaking cornuto comes in the infant, after we had protested and spoke the prologue of our comedy. Shakespeare.
I have long lov'd her; and I protest to you, bestowed much on her; followed her with a doating observance. Shakespeare.
He protests against your votes, and swears
He'll not be try'd by any but his peers. Denham.
The conscience has power to disapprove and to protest against the exorbitances of the passions. South.
TO PROTEST. v. a.
1. To prove; to show; to give evidence of. Not used.
Many unfought youths, that even now Pr test their fir'd of manhood. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
2. To call as a witness.
Fiercely they oppos'd
My journey strange, with clamorous uproar,
Protesting fate supreme. Milton.
PROTEST. n. f. [from the verb.] A solemn declaration of opinion against something.
PROTESTANT. adj. [from protest.] Belonging to protestants.
Since the spreading of the protestant religion, several nations are recovered out of their ignorance. Addison.
PROTESTANT. n. f. [protestant, Fr. from protest.] One of those who adhere to them, who, at the beginning of the reformation, protested against the errors of the church of Rome.
This is the first example of any protestant subjects, that have taken up arms against their king a protestant. K. Charles.
PROTESTATION. n. f. [protestation, Fr. from protest.] A solemn declaration of resolution, fact or opinion.
He maketh protestation to them of Corinth, that the gospel did not by other means prevail with them, than with others the same gospel taught by the rest of the apostles. Hooker.
But to your protestation; let me hear What you profess. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.
If the lords of the council issued out any order against them, some nobleman published a protestation against it. Clarendon.
I smiled at the solemn protestation of the poet in the first page, that he believes neither in the fates or destinies. Addison.
PROTESTER. n. f. [from protest.] One who protests; one who utters a solemn declaration.
Did I use
To stale with ordinary oaths my love
To every new protester? Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.
What if he were one of the latest protesters against popery?
and but one among many, that set about the same work? Att.
PROTHONOTARY. n. f. [protonotaire, Fr. protonotarius, Lat.] The head register.
Saligniacus, the pope's prothonotary, denies the Nubians professing of obedience to the bishop of Rome. Brewster.

dignity of the principal register.
He had the prothonotaryship of the chancery. Corew.
PROTOCOL. n. f. [protokoll, Dutch; protocoles, Fr. πρωτοκόλλος, from πρωτος and κολλω.] The original copy of any writing.
An original is filled the protocol, or scriptura matrix; and if the protocol, which is the root and foundation of the instrument, does not appear, the instrument is not valid. Asylife.
PROTOCOLARY. n. f. [protokollary, and protokollary.] The first martyr.
A term applied to St. Stephen.
PROTOPLAST. n. f. [protoplastos, and πρωτοπλαστος.] Original; thing first formed as a copy to be followed afterwards.
The confusion was the primitive difcase, which put a period to our protoplasts, Adam and Eve. Harvey.
PROTOTYPE. n. f. [prototype, Fr. πρωτότυπον.] The original of a copy; exemplar; archetype.
Man is the prototype of all exact symmetry. Wotton.
The image and prototype were two distinct things; and therefore what belonged to the exemplar could not be attributed to the image. Stillingfleet.
TO PROTRACT. v. a. [protractus, Lat.] To draw out;
to delay; to lengthen; to spin to length.
Where can they get victuals to support such a multitude,
if we do but protract the war. Knolles.
He thrives this woman to her smock;
Else ne'er could he so long protract his speech. Shakespeare.
PROTRACT. n. f. [from the verb.] Tedious continuance.
Since I did leave the presence of my love,
Many long weary days I have out-worn,
And many nights, that slowly seem'd to move
Their sad protract from evening until morn. Spenser.
PROTRACTER. n. f. [from protract.]
1. One who draws out any thing to tedious length.
2. A mathematical instrument for taking and measuring angles.
PROTRACTOR. n. f. [from protract.] The act of drawing to length.
Those delays
And long protraction, which he must endure, Betrays the opportunity. Daniel.
As to the fabulous protraction of the age of the world by the Egyptians, they are uncertain idle traditions. Hale.
PROTRACTIVE.

PRO

PROVIDENTLY. adv. [from provident.] With foresight; with wife precaution.
Nature having designed water-fowls to fly in the air, and live in the water, she providently makes their feathers of such a texture, that they do not admit the water. Boyle.
PROVIDER. n. f. [from provide.] He who provides or procures.

Here's money for my meat,
I would have left it on the board, to soon
As I had made my meal, and parted thence With prayers for the provider. Shaksp.

PROVINCE. n. f. [from provincia, Fr. provincia, Latin.]
1. A conquered country; a country governed by a delegate.
Those provinces these arms of mine did conquer. Shak.
Greece, Italy and Sicily were divided into commonwealths, till swallowed up, and made provinces by Rome. Temple.
See them broke with toils, or sunk in ease,
Or infamous for plunder'd provinces. Pope.
2. The proper office or business of any one.
I am fit for honour's toughest task;
Nor ever yet found fooling was my province. Ormsby.
Nor can I alone sustain this day's province. Mare.
'Tis thine, whatever is pleasant, good or fair;
All nature is thy province, life thy care. Dryden.
'Tis not the pretor's province to bestow True freedom. Dryden's Persius.
The woman's province is to be careful in her economy, and chaste in her affection. Taiter.
3. A region; a tract.
Over many a tract
Of heav'n they march'd, and many a province wide. Milt.
Their understandings are cooped up in narrow bounds;
so that they never look abroad into other provinces of the intellectual world. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
PROVINCIAL. adj. [from provincial, Fr. from provincia.]
1. Relating to a province.
The duke dare not mere stretch
This finger of mine, than he dare rack his own;
His subject am I not, nor here provincial. Shaksp.
2. Appertaining to the provincial country.
Some have delivered the polity of spirits, and left an account even to their provincial dominions. Brown.
3. Not of the mother country; rude; unpolished.
They build and treat with such magnificence,
That, like th' ambitious monarchs of the age,
They give the law to our provincial flags. Dryden.
A country 'quire having only the provincial accent upon his tongue, which is neither a fault, nor in his power to remedy, must marry a cast wench. Swift.
4. Belonging only to an archbishop's jurisdiction; not ecumenical.
A law made in a provincial synod, is properly termed a provincial constitution. Ayliffe's Parergon.
PROVINCIAL. n. f. [from provincia, Fr. from provincia.] A spiritual governor.
Valignanus was provincial of the Jesuits in the Indies. Still.
TO PROVINCIALIZE. v. a. [from provincia.] To turn to a province. A word not in use.
When there was a design to provinciate the whole kingdom, Druma, though offered a canton, would not accept of it. Hewitt's Vocal Forest.
TO PROVINCE. v. n. [from provincer, Fr.] To lay a stock or branch of a vine in the ground to take root for more encrease.
PROVISION. n. f. [from provision, Fr. provisio, Latin.]
1. The act of providing beforehand.
Kalandar knew, that provision is the foundation of hospitality, and thrift the fewel of magnificence. Sidney.
2. Measures taken beforehand.
Five days we do allow thee for provision,
To shield thee from disasters of the world. Shaksp.
He preserved all points of humanity, in taking order and making provision for the relief of strangers distressed. Bacon.
The prudent part is to propole remedies for the present evils, and provisions against future events. Temple.
Religion lays the strictest obligations upon men, to make the best provision for their comfortable subsistence in this world, and their salvation in the next. Tillotson.
3. Accumulation of stores beforehand; stock collected.
Mendoza advertised, that he would valiantly defend the city, so long as he had any provision of victuals. Kneller.
In such abundance lies our choice,
As leaves a greater store of fruit untouched,
Still hanging incorruptible, till men
Grow up to their provision. Milton.
David, after he had made such vast provision of materials for the temple, yet because he had dipt his hands in blood, was not permitted to lay a stone in that sacred pile. South.
4. Victuals; food; provender.
He caused provisions to be brought in. Clarendon.
Provisions laid in large for man or beast. Milton.
5. Stipulation; terms settled.
This law was only to reform the degenerate English, but there was no care taken for the reformation of the mere Irish, no ordinance, no provision made for the abolishing of their barbarous customs. Daniel, on Ireland.

PROVISIONAL. adj. [from provisio, Fr. from provisio.] Temporarily established; provided for present need.

The commendata femetris grew out of a natural equity, that, in the time of the patron's reprieve given him to present, the church should not be without a provisional pastor. Ayliffe.
PROVISIONALLY. adv. [from provisio.] By way of provision.
The abbot of St. Martin was born, was baptized, and declared a man provisionally, till time should show what he would prove, nature had moulded him so untowardly. Lake.
PROVISO. n. f. [Latin: as, provisio rem ita se habiturum esse.] Stipulation; caution; provisional condition.
This provisio is needful, that the sheriff may not have the like power of life as the marshal hath. Speiser.
Some will allow the church no further power, than only to exhort, and this but with a provisio too, that it extends not to such as think themselves too wise to be advised. South.
He doth deny his prisoners,
But with provisio and exception,
That we, at our own charge, shall ransom strait
His brother-in-law. Shaksp. Henry IV.

PROVOCATION. n. f. [from provocatio, Lat. provocatio, Fr.]
1. An act or cause by which anger is raised.
It is a fundamental law, in the Turkish empire, that they may, without any other provocation, make war upon Christendom for the propagation of their law. Bacon.
I tempt not my swelling rage
With black reproaches, scorn and provocation. Smith.
2. An appeal to a judge.
A provocation is every act, whereby the office of the judge or his assistance is asked; a provocation including both a judicial and an extrajudicial appeal. Ayliffe.
3. I know not whether, in the following passages, it be appel or incitement.
The like effects may grow in all towards their pastor, and in their pastor towards every of them, between whom there daily and interchangeably pass in the hearing of God himself, and in the presence of his holy angels, so many heavenly acclamations, exultations, provocations, and petitions. Hester.
PROVOCATIVE. n. f. [from provocatio.] Any thing which receives a decayed or cloyed appetite.
There would be no variety of tastes to solicit his palate, and occasion excess, nor any artificial provocatives to relieve satiety. Ayliffe.
PROVOCATIVENESS. n. f. [from provocatio.] The quality of being provocative.

TO PROVOKE. v. a. [from provocare, Fr. provocare, Latin.]
1. To rouse; to excite by something offensive; to awake.
Ye provoked me unto wrath, burning incense unto other Gods. Jer. xli. 8.
Neither to provolve nor dread
New war provoked. Milton.
To what their courage, and their rage provoked. Dryden.
I neither fear, nor will provolve the war. Dryden.
2. To anger; to enrage; to offend; to incense.
Though often provoked, by the insolence of some of the bishops, to a dislike of their overmuch fervour, his integrity to the king was without blemish. Clarendon.
Such acts
Of contumacy will provolve the highest. Milton.
Agamemnon provokes Apollo against them, whom he was willing to appease afterwards. Pope.
3. To cause; to promote.
Drink is a great provoker; it provokes and unprovokes. Shak.
One Petro covered up his patient with warm cloaths, and when the fever began a little to decline, gave him cold water to drink till he provoked sweat. Arbutnot.
4. To challenge.
He now provokes the sea-gods from the shore,
With enoy Triton heard the martial sound,
And the bold champion for his challenge drown'd. Dryden.
5. To induce by motive; to move; to incite.
We may not be startled at the breaking of the exterior earth; for the face of nature hath provoked men to think of, and observe such a thing. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

TO PROVOKE. v. n.
1. To appeal. A Latinism.
Arius and Pelagius durst provolve
To what the centuries preceding spoke. Dryden.
2. To produce anger.
It was not your brother's evil disposition made him seek his death, but a provoking merit. Shaksp. King Lear.
The Lord abhorred them, because of the provoking of his sons. Deut. xxxii. 19.
If we consider man in such a loathsome and provoking condition, was it not love enough, that he was permitted to enjoy a being. Tillotson.
PROVOKER. n. f. [from provocare.]
1. One that raises anger.
As in all civil insurrections, the ringleader is looked on with a peculiar severity, so, in this case, the first provoker has double portion of the guilt. Government of the Tongue.
2. Causar;

PRO

2. Causar; promoter.
Drink, Sir, is a great provoker of nosleeping, sleep, and urine. Shaksp. Macbeth.
PROVOKINGLY. adv. [from provoking.] In such a manner as to raise anger.

When we see a man that yesterday kept a humiliation, today invading the possessions of his brethren, we need no other proof how hypocritically and provokingly he confessed his pride. Decay of Piety.
PROVOST. n. f. [from provost, Sax. provost, Fr. provosto, Ital. provostus, Lat.]
1. The chief of any body: as, the provost of a college.
2. The executioner of an army.
Kingston, provost marshal of the king's army, was deemed not only cruel but inhuman in his executions. Howard.
PROVOSTSHIP. n. f. [from provost.] The office of a provost.
C. Pilo first role, and afterwards was advanced to the provostship of Rome by Theobald. Hakewill.
PROV. n. f. [from prova, Fr. prova, Spanish; prova, Lat.] The head or forepart of a ship.
The sea-victory of Vespasian was a lady holding a palm in her hand, at her foot the prova of a ship. Peacocks.
Straight to the Dutch he turns his dreadful prova,
More fierce th' important quarrel to decide. Dryden.
PROV. adj. Valiant. Speiser.
PROV. n. f. [from prova, Italian; prova, Fr.] Bravery; valour; military gallantry.

Men of such provows, as not to know fear in themselves, and yet to teach it in others that should deal with them; for they had often made their lives triumph over most terrible dangers, never dismayed, and ever fortunate. Sidney.
I hope
That your wisdom will direct my thought,
Or that your provows can me yield relief. Fa. Queen.
By heav'n's mere grace, not by our provows done. F. Qu.
Henry the fifth,
By his provows conquered all France. Shaksp.
Nor should thy provows want praise and esteem,
But that 'tis shown in treason. Shaksp. Henry VI.
Those are they
First seen in acts of provows eminent,
And great exploits; but of true virtue void. Milton.
These beyond compare of mortal provows. Milton.
Michael! of celestial armies prince;
And thou in military provows next,
Gabriel! Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.
The vigour of this arm was never vain,
And that my wonted provows I retain,
Witness these heaps of slaughter on the plain. Dryden.
These were the entertainments of the foster nations, that fell under the virtue and provows of the two last empires. Temp.
PROV. adj. [the superlative formed from prov, adj.]
1. Brave; most valiant.
They be two of the provows knights on ground,
And oft approv'd in many a hard assay,
And eke of it forest steel, that may be found,
Do arm yourself against that day them to confound. F. Qu.
2. Brave; valiant.
The fairest of her sex, Angelica,
His daughter, sought by many provows knights. Milton.
TO PROWL. v. a. [Of this word the etymology is doubtful: the old dictionaries write prole, which the dreamer Cosmopolis derives from prole, ready, quick. Skinner, a far more judicious etymologist, deduces it from prole, a diminutive formed by himself from prole, to prey, Fr. perhaps it may be formed, by accidental corruption, from prole.] To rove over.
He prows each place, still in new colours deckt,
Sucking one's ill, another to infect. Sidney.
TO PROWL. v. n. To wander for prey; to prey; to plunder.
The champion robeth by night,
And prows and filcheth by day. Tusser.
Nor do they bear so quietly the loss of some parcels confiscated abroad, as the great detriment which they suffer by some prows vice-admiral or publick minister. Raleigh.
As when a prows wolf,
Whom hunger drives to seek new haunt for prey. Milton.
Shall he, who looks erect on heav'n,
E'er stoop to mingle with the prows herd,
And dip his tongue in gore. Thomson.
And here the fell attorney prows for prey. Anon.
PROWLER. n. f. [from prowl.] One that roves about for prey.

On churchyards dear,
The disappointed *prows*ers fall, and dig
The shrouded body from the grave. Thomson.
PROXIMATE. adj. [from proximus, Lat.] Next in the series of ratiocination; near and immediate: opposed to remote and mediate.
Writing a theory of the deluge, we were to shew the proximate natural causes of it. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
Substance is the remote genus of bird, because it agrees not only to all kinds of animals, but also to things inanimate;

PRO

but animal is the proximate or nearest genus of bird, because it agrees to fewest other things. Watts's Logick.
PROXIMATELY. adv. [from proximate.] Immediately; without intervention.

The consideration of our mind, which is incorporeal, and the contemplation of our bodies, which have all the characters of excellent contrivance; these alone easily and proximately guide us to the wife author of all things. Bentley.
PROXIMATE. adj. [from proximus, Lat.] Next; immediate.
A syllogism is made up of three propositions, and these of three terms variously joined: the three terms are called the remote matter of a syllogism, the three propositions the proximate or immediate matter of it. Watts's Logick.
PROXIMITY. n. f. [from proximitas, Fr. proximitas, from proximus, Lat.] Nearness.

When kingdoms have customably been carried by right of succession, according to proximity of blood; the violation of this course hath always been dangerous. Howard.
If he plead proximity of blood,
That empty title is with ease withstood. Dryden.
Add the convenience of the situation of the eye, in respect of its proximity to the brain, the feat of common sense. Ray.
I can call to my assistance
Proximity, mark that! and distance. Prior.
Must we lend to stab or poison all the popish princes, who have any pretended title to our crown by the proximity of blood? Swift's Miscellanies.
PROXY. n. f. [By contraction from procuracy.]
1. The agency of another.
2. The substitution of another; the agency of a substitute; appearance of a representative.
None acts a friend by a deputy, or can be familiar by proxy. South's Sermons.
Had Hyde thus sat by proxy too,
As Venus once was said to do,
The painter must have search'd the skies,
To match the lustre of her eyes. Granvil.
3. The person substituted or deputed.
A wife man will commit no business of importance to a proxy, where he may do it himself. L'Estrange.
PRUCE. n. f. [Pruce is the old name for Prussia.] Prussian leather.
Some leathern bucklers use
Of folded hides, and others shields of pruce. Dryden.
PRUDE. n. f. [from prude, Fr.] A woman over nice and scrupulous; and with false affectation.
The graver prude links downward to a gnome,
In search of mischief, still on earth to roam. Pope.
Not one careless thought intrudes,
Lest modest than the speech of prudes. Swift.
PRUDENCE. n. f. [from prudencia, Fr. prudencia, Lat.] Wisdom applied to practice.
Under prudence is comprehended, that discrete, apt, suiting, and disposing as well of actions as words, in their due place, time and manner. Peacocks.
Prudence is principally in reference to actions to be done, and due means, order, season, and method of doing or not doing. Hale.
PRUDENT. adj. [from prudens, Fr. prudens, Lat.]
1. Practically wise.
The simple inherit folly, but the prudent are crowned with knowledge. Prov. xiv. 18.
I have seen a son of Jesse, that is a man of war, and prudent in matters. 1 Sam. xvi. 18.
The monarch prevented all reply,
Prudent, lest others might offer. Milton.
2. Foreseeing by natural instinct.
So steers the prudent crane
Her annual voyage. Milton.
PRUDENTIAL. adj. [from prudens.] Eligible on principles of prudence.
He acts upon the surest and most prudential grounds, who, whether the principles, which he acts upon, prove true or false, yet secures a happy issue to his actions. South.
Motives are only prudential, and not demonstrative. Tillotson.
These virtues, though of excellent use, some prudential rules it is necessary to take with them in practice. Rogers.
PRUDENTIALS. n. f. Maxims of prudence or practical wisdom.
Many fables, in poetick measures, contain rules relating to common prudentials, as well as to religion. Watts.
PRUDENTIALLY. adv. [from prudential.] Eligibility on principles of prudence.
Being incapable rightly to judge the prudentiality of affairs, they only gaze upon the visible success, and thereafter condemn or cry up the whole progression. Brown.
PRUDENTIALLY. adv. [from prudential.] According to the rules of prudence.
If he acts piously, soberly and temperately, he acts prudentially and safely. South's Sermons.
PRUDENTLY. adv. [from prudens.] Discretely; judiciously.
These laws were to prudently framed, as they are found fit for all succeeding times. Bacon's Henry VII.

Such deep designs of empire does he lay
O'er them, whose cause he seems to take in hand;
And prudently would make them lords at sea;
To whom with ease he can give laws by land. Dryden.
PRUDERY. n. f. [from prude.] Overmuch nicety in conduct.
PRUDISH. adj. [from prude.] Affectedly grave.
I know you all expect, from seeing me,
Some formal lecture, spoke with prudish face. Garrick.
To PRUNE, v. a. [of unknown derivation.]
1. To lop; to divert trees of their superfluities.
So lop'd and pruned trees do flourish fair. Davies.
Let us ever extol
His bounty, following our delightful task,
To prune those growing plants, and tend these flow'rs. Milt.
What we by day
Lop overgrown, or prune, or prop, or bind,
One night with wanton growth derides, Tending to wild. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.
Horace will our superfluous branches prune,
Give us new rules, and let our harp in tune. Waller.
You have no less right to correct me, than the same hand that raised a tree, has to prune it. Pope.
2. To clear from excrescences.
His royal bird
Prunes the immortal wing, and cloyes his beak. Shakep.
Many birds prune their feathers; and crows seem to call upon rain, which is but the comfort they receive in the relentment of the air. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
The muse, whose early voice you taught to sing,
Prescrib'd her heights, and prun'd her tender wing. Pope.
To PRUNE. v. n. To dress; to pink. A ludicrous word.
Every scribbling man
Grows a top as fast as e'er he can,
Prunes up, and asks his oracle the glass,
If pink or purple best become his face. Dryden.
PRUNE. n. f. [prune, pruneau, Fr. prunum, Lat.] A dried plum.
In drying of pears and prunes in the oven, and removing of them, there is a like operation. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
PRUNEL. n. f. An herb. Ainsworth.
PRUNELLO. n. f.
1. A kind of stuff of which the clergymen's gowns are made.
Worth makes the man, and want of it, the fellow;
The rest is all but leather or prunello. Pope.
2. [Prunelle, Fr.] A kind of plum. Ainsworth.
PRUNER. n. f. [from prune.] One that crops trees.
Left thy redundant juice
Should fading leaves, instead of fruits, produce,
The pruner's hand with letting blood must quench
Thy heat, and thy exuberant parts retrench. Denham.
PRUNTEROUS. adj. [prunum and fero, Lat.] Plum bearing.
PRUNINGHOOK. n. f. A hook or knife used in lopping
PRUNINGKNIFE. n. f. trees.
Let thy hand supply the pruningknife,
And crop luxuriant stragglers. Dryden.
No plough shall hurt the glebe, no pruninghook the vine.
Dryden's Virgil.
The cyder land obsequious still to thrones,
Her pruninghook extended into swords. Philips.
PRURIENCE. n. f. [from prurio, Lat.] An itching or a great
PRURIENCY. n. f. desire or appetite to any thing. Swift.
PRURIENT. adj. [pruriens, Lat.] Itching. Ainsworth.
PRURIGINOUS. adj. [prurio, Lat.] Tending to an itch.
To PRY, v. n. [of unknown derivation.] To peep narrowly;
to inspect officiously, curiously, or impertinently.
I can counterfeit the deep tragedian,
Speak, and look back, and pry on ev'ry side, Intending deep suspicion. Shakep. Richard III.
I pry'd me through the crevice of a wall,
When for his hand he had his two sons heads. Shakep.
Watch thou, and wake when others be asleep,
To pry into the secrets of the state. Shakep.
We of th' offending side
Must keep aloof from strict arbitrement;
And stop all sight holes, every loop, from whence
The eye of reason may pry in upon us. Shakep.
He that pryeth in at her windows, shall also hearken at her doors. Ecclef. xiv. 23.
And pry
In every bush and brake, where hap may find
The serpent sleeping.
We have naturally a curiosity to be prying and searching into forbidden secrets. L'Estrange.
Search well
Each grove and thicket, pry in ev'ry shape, Left hid in some th' arch hypocrite escape. Dryden.
I walk'd, and looking round the bow'r
Search'd ev'ry tree, and pry'd on ev'ry flow'r,
If any where by chance I might esp'y
The rural poet of the melody. Dryden.
Nor need we with a prying eye survey
The distant skies, to find the milky way. Creech.
Actions are of so mixt a nature, that as men pry into them, so observe some parts more than others, they take different hints, and put contrary interpretations on them. Addison.

All these I frankly own without denying;
But where has this Praxiteles been prying? Addison.
PSALM. n. f. [psalm, psaume, Fr. psalmus.] A holy song.
The choice and flower of all things profitable in other books, the psalms do both more briefly contain and more movingly express, by reason of that poetical form wherewith they are written. Hooker, b. v. f. 37.
Sternhold was made groom of the chamber, for turning certain of David's psalms into verse. Peacham.
Those just spirits that wear victorious palms,
Hymns devote and holy psalms Milton.
Singing continually.
In another psalm, he speaks of the wisdom and power of God in the creation. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
PSALMIST. n. f. [psalmiste, Fr. from psalm.] Writer of holy songs.
How much more rational is this system of the psalmist, than the Pagans (scheme in Virgil, where one deity is represented as railing a storm, and another as laying it? Addison.
PSALMODY. n. f. [psalmodia, Fr. psalmodia.] The act or practice of singing holy songs.
PSALMOGRAPHY. n. f. [psalmos and γραφειν.] The act of writing psalms.
PSALTER. n. f. [psalter, Fr. psalterium.] The volume of psalms; a psalmbook.
PSALTERY. n. f. A kind of harp beaten with ficks.
The trumpets, flutes, psalteries and fifes
Make the sun dance. Shakep. Coriolanus.
Praise with trumpets, pierce the skies, Sandys's Paraph.
Praise with harps and psalteries.
The sweet finger of Israel with his psalter, loudly resounded the benefits of the almighty creator. Peacham.
Nought shall the psalter and the harp avail,
When the quick spirits their warm march forbear,
And numbing coldness has unbra'd the ear. Prior.
PSEUDO. n. f. [from ψευδος.] A prefix, which, being put before words, signifies false or counterfeit: as, pseudopyle, a counterfeit apostle.
PSEUDOGRAPHY. n. f. False writing.
I will not pursue the many pseudographies in use, but shew of how great concern the emphasis were, if rightly used. Held.
PSEUDODOLOGY. n. f. [ψευδολογια.] Falsehood of speech.
It is not according to the sound rules of pseudology, to report of a pious prince, that he neglects his devotion, but you may report of a merciful prince, that he has pardoned a criminal who did not deserve it. Arbutnot.
PSHAU. interj. An expression of contempt.
A peevish fellow has some reason for being out of humour, or has a natural incapacity for delight, and therefore disturbs all with pishies and pshaus. Spektator, N° 438.
PTISAN. n. f. [ptisane, Fr. ptisane.] A medical drink made of barley decocted with raisins and liquorice.
Thrice happy were those golden days of old,
When dear as Burgundy the ptisans fold;
When patients chose to die with better will,
Than breathe and pay the apothecary's bill. Garth.
In fevers the aliments prescribed by Hippocrates, were ptisans and cream of barley. Arbutnot.
PTYALISM. n. f. [ptyalismos, Fr. ptyalismos.] Salivation; effusion of spittle.
PTYSMAGOGUE. n. f. [πυσμαγογη and αγωγη.] A medicine which discharges spittle. Dill.
PUBERTY. n. f. [puberté, Fr. pubertas, Lat.] The time of life in which the two sexes begin first to be acquainted.
The cause of changing the voice at the years of puberty seemeth to be, for that when much of the moisture of the body, which did before irrigate the parts, is drawn down to the ipermatical vessels, it leaveth the body more hot than it was, whence cometh the dilatation of the pipes. Bacon.
All the carnivorous animals would have multiplied exceedingly, before these children that escap'd could come to the age of puberty. Bentley's Sermon.
PUBESCENCE. n. f. [from pubesco, Lat.] The state of arriving at puberty.
Solon divided it into ten septenaries; in the first is deduc-tion or falling of teeth, in the second pubescence. Brown.
PUBESCENT. adj. [from pubescens, Lat.] Arriving at puberty.
That the women are menstruant, and the men pubescent
at the year of twice seven, is accounted a punctual truth. Brown.
PUBLICAN. n. f. [from publicus, Lat.]
1. A toll gatherer.
As Jesus sat at meat, many publicans and sinners came and sat down with him. Matth. ix. 10.
2. A man that keeps a house of general entertainment. In low language.
PUBLICATION. n. f. [publico, Lat.]
1. The act of publishing; the act of notifying to the world;
divulgation; proclamation.
For the instruction of all men to eternal life, it is necessary, that the sacred and saving truth of God be openly published unto them, which open publication of heavenly mysteries is by an excellency termed preaching. Hooker.
2. Edition;

PUB

2. Edition; the act of giving a book to the publick.
An imperfect copy having been offered to a bookseller, you consented to the publication of one more correct. Pope.
The publication of these papers was not owing to our folly, but that of others. Swift.
PUBLIC. adj. [publicus, publique, Fr. publicus, Lat.]
1. Belonging to a state or nation; not private.
By following the law of private reason, where the law of publick should take place, they breed disturbance. Hooker.
Of royal maids how wretched is the fate,
Born only to be victims of the state;
Our hopes, our wishes, all our passions try'd
For publick use, the slaves of others pride. Granvil.
Have we not able counsellors, hourly watching over the publick weal. Swift.
2. Open; notorious; generally known.
Joseph being a just man, and not willing to make her a publick example, was minded to put her away privily. Matth.
3. Generally done by many.
A dismal universal hiss, the sound
Of publick scorn. Milton.
4. Regarding not private interest, but the good of the community.
They were publick hearted men, as they paid all taxes, so they gave up all their time to their country's service, without any reward. Clarendon.
All nations that grew great out of little or nothing, did so merely by the publick mindedness of particular persons. Saunders.
A good magistrate must be endowed with a publick spirit, that is with such an excellent temper, as sets him loose from all felfish views, and makes him endeavour towards promoting the common good. Asterbury.
5. Open for general entertainment.
The income of the commonwealth is raised on such as have money to spend at taverns and publick houses. Addison.
PUBLICK. n. f. [from publicus, Lat. le publicus, Fr.]
1. The general body of mankind; or of a state or nation; the people.
The publick is more disposed to censure than to praise. Add.
2. Open view; general notice.
Philosophy, though it likes not a gaudy dress, yet, when it appears in publick, must have so much complacency, as to be clothed in the ordinary fashion. Locke.
In private grief, but with a careless scorn;
In publick 'tis to triumph, not to mourn. Graville.
In publick 'tis they hide,
Where none distinguish. Pope.
PUBLICLY. adv. [from public.]
1. In the name of the community.
This has been so sensibly known by trading nations, that great rewards are publicly offered for its supply. Addison.
2. Openly; without concealment.
Sometimes also it may be private, communicating to the judges some things not fit to be publicly delivered. Bacon.
PUBLICNESS. n. f. [from public.]
1. State of belonging to the community.
The multitude of partners does detract nothing from each private share, nor does the publickness of it lessen propriety in it. Boyle.
2. Openness; state of being generally known or publick.
PUBLICSPIRITED. adj. [public and spirit.] Having regard to the general advantage above private good.
'Tis enough to break the neck of all honest purposes, to kill all generous and publickspirited motions in the conception. L'Estrange.
These were the publickspirited men of their age, that is,
patriots of their own interest. Dryden.
Another publickspirited project, which the common enemy could not foresee, might set king Charles on the throne. Add.
It was generous and publickspirited in you, to be of the kingdom's side in this dispute, by shewing, without reserve, your disapprobation of Wood's design. Swift.
To PUBLISH, v. a. [publish, Fr. publis, Lat.]
1. To discover to mankind; to make generally and openly known; to proclaim; to divulge.
How will this grieve you,
When you shall come to clearer knowledge, that You thus have published me. Shakep. Winter's Tale.
His commission from God and his doctrine tend to the impressing the necessity of that reformation, which he came to publish. Hammond's Fundamentals.
Suppose he should relent,
And publish grace to all. Milton.
Th' unwearied fun, from day to day,
Does his Creator's pow'r display,
And publishes to every land
The work of an almighty hand. Addison's Spectator.
2. To put forth a book into the world.
If I had not unwarily too far engaged myself for the present publishing it, I should have kept it by me. Digby.
PUBLISHER. n. f. [from publish.]
1. One who makes publick or generally known.

PUD

Love of you
Hath made me publisher of this pretence. Shakep.
The holy lives, the exemplary sufferings of the publishers of this religion, and the surpassing excellence of that doctrine which they published. Asterbury.
2. One who puts out a book into the world.
A collection of poems appeared, in which the publisher has given me some things that did not belong to me. Prior.
PUCELAGE. n. f. [French.] A state of virginity. Dill.
PUCK. n. f. [perhaps the same with pug.] Some sprite among the fairies, common in romances.
O gentle puck, take this transformed scalp
From off the head of this Athenian swain. Shakep.
Turn your cloaks,
Quoth he, for puck is busy in these oaks,
And this is fairy ground. Corbet.
PUCKBALL or puckst. n. f. [from puck the fairy, a fairy's ball.]
A kind of mushroom full of dust. Dill.
To PUCKER. v. a. [from puck the fairy; as elstacks, from elves, or from powk, a pocket or hollow.] To gather into corruga-tions; to contract into folds or plications.
I saw an hideous spectre; his eyes were sunk into his head, his face pale and withered, and his skin puckered up in wrinkles. Spektator, N° 192.
A figure above the part wounded is pernicious, as it
puckers up the intestines, and disorders its situation. Sharp.
PUDDER. n. f. [This is commonly written pother. See POTHER. This is most probably derived by Mr. Lye from pudder, Ilandick, a rapid motion.] A tumult; a turbulent and irregular bustle.
Let the great gods,
That keep this dreadful pudder o'er our heads,
Find out their enemies. Shakep. King Lear.
What a pudder is made about essences, and how much is all knowledge pestered by the careless use of words? Locke.
To PUDDER. v. n. [from the noun.] To make a tumult;
to make a bustle.
Mathematicians, abstracting their thoughts from names, and setting before their minds the ideas themselves, have avoided a great part of that perplexity, puddering and confusion, which has so much hindered knowledge. Locke.
To PUDDER. v. a. To perplex; to disturb; to confound.
He that will improve every matter of fact into a maxim, will abound in contrary observations, that can be of no other use but to perplex and pudder him. Locke.
PUDDING. n. f. [pudding, Welsh, an intestine; boudin, French;
pudding, Swedish.]
2. A kind of food very variously compounded, but generally made of meal, milk, and eggs.
Salads, and eggs, and lighter fare
Tune the Italian pudding's guitar;
And if I take Dan Congreve right,
Pudding and beef make Britons fight. Prior.
3. The gut of an animal.
He'll yield the crow a pudding one of these days; the king has kill'd his heart. Shakep. Henry V.
As sure as his guts are made of puddings. Shakep.
3. A bowl stuffed with certain mixtures of meal and other ingredients.
Mind neither good nor bad, nor right nor wrong,
But eat your pudding, slave, and hold your tongue. Prior.
PUDDINGPIE. n. f. [pudding and pie.] A pudding with meat baked in it.
Some cry the covenant, instead
Of puddingpies and gingerbread. Hudibras.
PUDDINGTIME. n. f. [pudding and time.]
1. The time of dinner; the time at which pudding, anciently the first dish, is set upon the table.
2. Nick of time; critical minute.
Mars that still protects the stout,
In puddingtime came to his aid. Hudibras.
PUDDLE. n. f. [from puteolus, Lat. Skinner; from poil, dirt, old Bavarian, junius; hence pool.] A small muddy lake;
a dirty plash.
The Hebrews drink of the well-head, the Greeks of the stream, and the Latins of the puddle. Hall.
Thou did'st drink
The stale of horses, and the gilded puddle
Which beasts would cough at. Shakep. Ant. and Cleop.
A physician cured madmen thus: they were tied to a stake, and then set in a puddle, 'till brought to their wits. L'Estr.
Treading where the treacherous puddle lays
His heels flew up; and on the grassy floor
He fell, besmear'd with filth. Dryden's Virgil.
Happy was the man, who was sent on an errand to the most remote street, which he performed with the greatest alacidity, ran through every puddle, and took care to return covered with dirt. Addison's Freeholder.
To PUDDLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To muddy; to pollute with dirt; to mix dirt and water.
As if I saw my sun shine in a puddled water, I cried out of nothing but Mopia. Sidney.

PUF

- Some unhatch'd practice
Hath puddled his clear spirit; and, in such cales,
Men's natures wrangle with inferior things,
Though great ones are their object. Shakefp. Othello.
His beard they fling'd off with brand of fire,
And ever as it blaz'd, they threw on him
Great pails of puddled mire to quench the hair. Shakefp.
The noblest blood of Africk
Runs in my veins, a purer stream than thine;
For, though derived from the same source, thy current Is puddl'd and defil'd with tyranny. Dryden.
PUDDLY. adj. [from puddle.] Muddy; dirty; miry.
Limy, or thick puddly water killeth them. Carew.
PUDDOCK or PARROCK. n. f. [for puddock or parrock.] A provincial word for a small inclosure. Diſt.
PUDDENY. n. f. [pudden, Lat.] Modesty; shamefacedness.
A pudency to rosy, the sweet view on't Might well have warm'd old Saturn. Shakefp.
PUDDICITY. n. f. [puddicit, Fr. from pudicitia, Lat.] Modesty; chastity. Diſt.
PUFFELLO. n. f. A partner.
This carnal cur
Preys on the issue of his mother's body;
And makes her puffellow with others moan. Shakefp.
PUFFLE. adj. [puerile, Fr. puerilis, Lat.] Childish; boyish.
I looked upon the mansion with a veneration mixt with a pleasure, that represented her to me in those puerile amusements. Pope.
PUERILITY. n. f. [puerilité, Fr. from puerilitas, Lat.] Childishness; boyishness.
A reserve of puerility not shaken off from school. Brown.
Some men imagining themselves possessed with a divine fury, often fall into toys and trifles, which are only puerilties. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
PUE. n. f. A kind of water fowl.
Among the first fort are coots, fanderlings and pewets. Car.
The fish have enemies enough; as otters, the cormorant and the pue. Walton's Angler.
PUFF. n. f. [puf, Dutch, a blast which swells the checks.]
1. A quick blast with the mouth.
In garret vile, he with a warming puff Regales chill'd fingers. Philips.
2. The Rosemary, in the days of Henry VII. with a sudden puff of wind stooped her side, and took in water at her ports in such abundance, as that the instantly sunk. Raleigh.
The naked breathless bodies lie,
To every puff of wind a slave,
At the beck of every wave,
That once perhaps was fair, rich, stout and wise. Flatman.
A puff of wind blows off cap and wig. L'Eſtrange.
There fierce winds o'er dusky vallies blow,
Whole every puff bears empty shades away. Dryden.
With one fierce puff he blows the leaves away,
Expos'd the self-discover'd infant lay. Dryden.
3. A mudroom. Ainsworth.
4. Any thing light and porous: as, puff paste.
5. Something to sprinkle powder on the hair.
TO PUFF. v. n. [puffen, Dutch.]
1. To swell the cheeks with wind.
2. To blow with a quick blast.
Wherefore do you follow her,
Like foggy South puffing with wind and rain. Shakefp.
Distinction with a broad and powerful fan,
Puffing at all, winnows the light away. Shakefp.
3. To blow with scornfulness.
Some puff at these infancies, as being such as were under a different economy of religion, and consequently not directly pertinent to ours. South's Sermons.
It is really to defy heaven, to puff at damnation, and bid omnipotence do its worst. South.
4. To breathe thick and hard.
Seld's down flamins
Do press among the popular throngs, and puff
To win a vulgar station. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
The ass comes back again, puffing and blowing from the chariot. L'Eſtrange.
A true son of the church
Came puffing with his greasy bald-pate choir,
And fumbling o'er his beads. Dryden.
5. To do or move with hurry, tumour, or tumultuous agitation.
More unconstant than the wind, who woes
Ev'n now the frozen bosom of the North,
And, being anger'd, puffs away from thence,
Turning his face to the dew-dropping South. Shakefp.
Then came brave glory puffing by
In filks that whistled, who but he?
He scarce allow'd me half an eye. Herbert.
6. To swell with the wind.
A new coal is not to be cast on the nitre, till the detonation be quite ended; unless the puffing matter blow the coal out of the crucible. Boyle.

PUI

- TO PUFF. v. a.
1. To swell as with wind.
Let him fall by his own greatness,
And puff him up with glory, till it swell
And break him. Denham's Scept.
Flattering of others, and boasting of ourselves, may be referred to puffing; the one to please others, and puff them up with self-conceit; the other to gain more honour than is due to ourselves. Ray on the Creation.
2. To drive or agitate with blasts of wind.
I have seen the cannon,
When it has blown his ranks into the air,
And from his arm puff'd his own brother. Shakefp.
Have I not heard the sea, puff'd up with winds,
Rage like an angry boar chafed with sweat? Shakefp.
Th' unerring sun by certain signs declares,
When the South projects a stormy day,
And when the clearing North will puff the clouds away. Dryden's Virgil's Georgics.
Why must the winds all hold their tongue?
If they a little breath should raise,
Would that have spoil'd the poet's song,
Or puff'd away the monarch's praise?
I have been endeavouring very busily to raise a friendship, which the first breath of any ill-natured by-stander could puff away. Pope.
3. To drive with a blast of breath scornfully.
When she dances in the wind,
And shakes her wings, and will not stay,
I puff the prostitute away;
The little or the much she gave is quietly resign'd. Dryd.
4. To swell or blow up with praise.
The attendants of courts engage them in quarrels of jurisdiction, being truly parafiti curia, in puffing a court up beyond her bounds for their own advantage. Bacon.
5. To swell or elate with pride.
His looks like a combe up puff'd with pride. Tupper.
This army, led by a tender prince,
Whole spirit with divine ambition puff'd,
Makes mouths at the invisible event. Shakefp. Hamlet.
Think not of men above that which is written, that no one of you be puff'd up one against another. 1 Cor. iv. 6.
Your ancestors, who puff your mind with pride,
Did not your honour, but their own advance. Dryden.
Who stands fast; tell me, is it he
That spreads and swells in puff'd posterity?
The Phœacians were so puff'd up with their constant felcity, that they thought nothing impossible. Brown.
PUFFER. n. f. [from puff.] One that puffs.
PUFFIN. n. f. [puffino, Italian.]
1. A water fowl.
Among the first fort, we reckon the dipchick, murre, creyfers, curlews and puffins. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
2. A kind of fish.
3. A kind of fungus filled with dust.
PUFFINGAPPLE. n. f. A sort of apple. Ainsworth.
PUFFINGLY. adv. [from puffing.]
1. Tumidly; with swell.
2. With shortness of breath.
PUFFY. adj. [from puff.]
1. Windy; flatulent.
Emphysema is a light puffy tumour, easily yielding to the pressure of your fingers, and arising again in the infant you take them off. Wise's Surgery.
2. Tumid; turgid.
An unjudicious poet, who aims at loftiness, runs easily into the swelling puffy stile, because it looks like greatness. Dryden.
PUG. n. f. [puga, Saxon, a girl. Skinner.] A kind name of a monkey, or any thing tenderly loved.
Upon setting him down, and calling him pug, I found him to be her favourite monkey. Addison's Spectator.
PUGGERED. adj. [perhaps for pucker'd.] Crowded; complicated. I never found this word in any other passage.
Nor are we to cavil at the red pugged attire of the turkey, and the long excrecence that hangs down over his bill, when he swells with pride. More's Antidote against Atheism.
PUGH. interj. [corrupted from puff, or borrowed from the found.]
A word of contempt.
PU'GIL. n. f. [pugille, Fr.] What is taken up between the thumb and two first fingers.
Take violets, and infuse a good pugil of them in a quart of vinegar. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
PUGNACIOUS. adj. [pugnax, Lat.] Inclinate to fight; quarrelsome; fighting.
PUGNACIOUSLY. n. f. [from pugnax, Lat.] Quarrelsome;
inclination to fight.
PU'IS. adj. [puis, French. It is commonly spoken and written puy. See PUY.]
1. Young; younger; later in time.
When the place of a chief judge becomes vacant, a puisne judge, who hath approved himself deserving, should be preferred. Bacon's Advice to Pillers.
He

PUL

- If he undergo any alteration, it must be in time, or of a pulsive date to eternity. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
2. Petty; inconsiderable; small.
A pulse tilter, that spurs his horse but one side, breaks his staff like a noble goole. Shakefp. As You Like it.
PULSANCE. n. f. [pulsance, Fr.] Power; strength; force.
The chariots were drawn not by the strength of horses, but by the pulsance of men. Deſcription of Troy.
Grandures, babies and old women;
Or past, or not arriv'd to, pith and pulsance. Shakefp.
Look with forehead bold and big enough
Upon the power and pulsance of the king. Shakefp.
Shall teach us highest deeds. Milton.
PULSANT. adj. [pulsant, Fr.] Powerful; strong; forcible.
The queen is coming with a pulsant host. Shakefp.
Told the most piteous tale of Lear
That ever ear receiv'd; which in recounting
His grief grew pulsant, and the strings of life Began to crack. Shakefp. King Lear.
For piety renew'd and pulsant deeds. Milton.
The climate of Syria, the far distance from the strength of Christendom, and the near neighbourhood of those that were most pulsant among the Mahometans, caused that famous enterprise, after a long continuance of terrible war, to be quite abandoned. Raleigh's Essays.
PULSANTLY. adv. [from pulsant.] Powerfully; forcibly.
PUKE. n. f. [of uncertain derivation.] Vomit; medicine causing vomit.
TO PUKE. v. n. To spew; to vomit.
The infant
Mewling and puking in the nurse's arms. Shakefp.
PU'KER. n. f. [from puke.] Medicine causing a vomit.
The puker rue,
The sweetest salafra is added too. Corib.
PULCHRITUDE. n. f. [pulchritudo, Lat.] Beauty; grace;
handsomeness; quality opposite to deformity.
Neither will it agree unto the beauty of animals, wherein there is an approved pulchritude. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Pulchritude is conveyed by the outward senses unto the soul, but a more intellectual faculty is that which relishes it. More.
By their virtuous behaviour they compensate the hardness of their favour, and by the pulchritude of their souls make up what is wanting in the beauty of their bodies. South.
That there is a great pulchritude and comeliness of proportion in the leaves, flowers and fruits of plants, is attested by the general verdict of mankind. Ray on the Creation.
TO PULE. v. n. [pauler, Fr.]
1. To cry like a chicken.
Let the songs be loud and cheerful, and not chirpings or pulings; let the music likewise be sharp and loud. Bacon.
2. To whine; to cry; to whimper.
To speak puling like a beggar at Hallom's. Shakefp.
To have a wretched puling fool,
A whining mammet, in her fortune's tender,
To answer, I'll not wed. Shakefp. Romeo and Juliet.
Weak puling things unable to sustain
Their share of labour, and their bread to gain. Dryden.
When ice covered the water, the child bathed his legs; a nd when he began this custom, was puling and tender. Locke.
This puling whining harlot rules his reason,
And prompts his zeal for Edward's bastard brood. Rowe.
PULICK. n. f. An herb. Ainsworth.
PULICOSE. adj. [pulicosus, puler, Latin.] Abounding with fleas. Diſt.
PULIOL. n. f. An herb. Ainsworth.
TO PULL. v. a. [pullian, Saxon.]
1. To draw violently towards one.
What they seem to offer us with the one hand, the fame with the other they pull back. Hooker.
He put forth his hand, and pulled the dove in. Gen. viii. 9.
His hand which he put forth dried up, so that he could not pull it in again. 1 Kings xiii. 4.
Pull them out like sheep for the slaughter, and prepare them for the day of slaughter. Jer. vii. 11.
They pulled away the shoulder and stopped their ears. Zech.
Ill fortune never crushed that man, whom good fortune deceived not; I therefore have counselled my friends to place all things he gave them so, as the night take them from them, not pull them. Benj. Johnson's Discovery.
2. To draw forcibly.
He was not so desirous of wars, as without just cause of his own to pull them upon him. Hayward.
A boy came in great hurry to pull off my boots. Swift.
3. To pluck; to gather.
When bounteous Autumn rears his head,
He joys to pull the ripest'd pear. Dryden.
Flax pulled in the bloom, will be whiter and stronger than if let stand till the seed is ripe. Martiner.
4. To tear; to rend.
He hath turned aside my ways, and pulled me in pieces;
he hath made me desolate. Lam. iii. 2.

PUL

- Ye pull off the robe with the garment from them that pa's by securely. Mic. ii. 8.
I rent my cloaths, and pulled off the hair from off my head. 1 Esdr. viii. 71.
5. TO PULL down. To subvert; to demolish.
Although it was judged in form of a statute, that he should be banished, and his whole estate confiscated, and his houses pulled down, yet his case even then had no great blot of ig-nominity. Bacon.
In political affairs, as well as mechanical, it is far easier to pull down than build up; for that structure, which was above ten summers a building, and that by no mean artists, was destroyed in a moment. Howel's Vocal Forest.
When God is said to build or pull down, 'tis not to be understood of an house; God builds and unbuilds worlds. Burn.
6. TO PULL down. To degrade.
He begs the gods to turn blind fortune's wheel,
To raise the wretched, and pull down the proud. Rowcom.
What title has this queen but lawless force?
And force must pull her down. Dryden.
7. TO PULL up. To extirpate; to eradicate.
What censure, doubting thus of innate principles, I may deserve from men, who will be apt to call it pulling up the old foundations of knowledge, I cannot tell; I persuade myself, that the way I have pursued, being conformable to truth, lays those foundations firmer. Locke.
PULL. n. f. [from the verb.] The act of pulling; pluck.
This wrestling pull between Corineus and Gogmagog is reported to have befallen at Dover. Carew.
Duke of Glo'ster, scarce himself,
That bears so shrewd a maim; two pulls at once;
His lady banish'd, and a limb lopt off. Shakefp.
I awaked with a violent pull upon the ring, which was fastened at the top of my box. Gulliver's Travels.
PULLER. n. f. [from pull.] One that pulls.
Shameless Warwick, peace?
Proud setter up and puller down of kings. Shakefp.
PULLER. n. f. [pullain, old Fr.] Poultry. Bailey.
PULLET. n. f. [poulet, Fr.] A young hen.
Brew me a pottle of sack finely.
—With eggs, Sir?
—Simple of itself; I'll no pullet sperm in my brewage. Sha.
I felt a hard tumour on the right side, the bigness of a pullet's egg. Wise's Surgery.
They died not because the pullets would not feed, but because the devil foresaw their death, he contrived that abstinence in them. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PULLEY. n. f. [pulley, Fr.] A small wheel running on a pivot, with a furrow on its outside in which a rope runs.
Nine hundred of the strongest men were employed to draw up these cords by many pulleys fastened on the poles, and, in three hours, I was raised and slung into the engine. Gulliver.
Here pulleys make the pond'rous oak ascend. Goy.
TO PULLULATE. v. n. [pullula, Lat. pulluler, Fr.] To germinate; to bud.
PULMONARY. adj. [from pulmo, Lat.] Belonging to the lungs.
The force of the air upon the pulmonary artery is but small in respect of that of the heart. Arbutnot.
Cold air, by its immediate contact with the surface of the lungs, is capable of producing defluxions upon the lungs, ulcerations, and all sorts of pulmonick consumptions. Arbutnot.
PULMONARY. n. f. [pulmonaire, Fr.] The herb lungwort. Ainsf.
PULMONICK. adj. [pulmo, Lat.] Belonging to the lungs.
An ulcer of the lungs may be a cause of pulmonick consumption, or consumption of the lungs. Harvey.
PULP. n. f. [pulpa, Lat. pulpe, Fr.]
1. Any soft mass.
The jaw bones have no marrow severed, but a little pulp of marrow diffused. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
2. The soft part of fruit; the part of fruit distinct from the seeds and rind.
The favour pulp they chew, and in the rind,
Still as they thirsted, scoop the brimming stream. Milton.
Besides this use of the pulp or pericarpium for the guard of the seed, it serves also by a secondary intention for the sustenance of man and other animals. Ray.
The grub
Oft unobserv'd invades the vital core,
Pernicious tenant, and her secret cave
Enlarges hourly, preying on the pulp Celestials. Philips.
PULPIT. n. f. [pul'itum, Lat. pulpitré, pupitre, Fr.]
1. A place raised on high, where a speaker stands.
Produce his body to the market-place,
And in the pulpit, as becomes a friend,
Speak in the order of his funeral. Shakefp. Julius Caesar.
2. The higher desk in the church where the sermon is pronounced; distinct from the lower desk where prayers are read.
We see on our theatres, the examples of vice rewarded, yet it ought not to be an argument against the art, any more than the impieties of the pulpit in the late rebellion. Dryden.
Sir

PUL

Sir Roger has given a handsome pulpit cloth, and railed in the communion table. Addison's Spectator, N° 112.
Bishops were not wont to preach out of the pulpit. Ayliffe.
Pulpits their sacred sayr learn'd to spare,
And vice admir'd to find a flatterer there. Pope.

PULPUS. adj. [from pulp.] Soft.
The redfreak's pulpous fruit
With gold irradiate, and vermilion shines. Philips.
PULPUSNESS. n. f. [from pulpus.] The quality of being pulposus.

PULPY. adj. [from pulp.] Soft; pappy.
In the walnut and plumbs is a thick pulpy covering, then a hard shell, within which is the seed. Ray on the Creation.
Putrefaction destroys the specific difference of one vegetable from another, converting them into a pulpy substance of an animal nature. Arbutnot on Aliments.

PULSATI. n. f. [pulsation, Fr. pulsate, from pulse, Lat.] The act of beating or moving with quick strokes against any thing opposing.

This original of the left vein was thus contrived, to avoid the pulsation of the great artery. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

These commotions of the mind and body oppress the heart, whereby it is choked and obstructed in its pulsation. Harvey.

PULSATOR. n. f. [from pulse, Lat.] A striker; a beater.

PULSE. n. f. [pulsus, Lat.]

1. The motion of an artery as the blood is driven through it by the heart, and as it is perceived by the touch.

Pulse is thus accounted for: when the left ventricle of the heart contracts, and throws its blood into the great artery, the blood in the artery is not only thrust forward towards the extremities, but the channel of the artery is likewise dilated; because fluids, when they are pressed, press again to all sides, and their pressure is always perpendicular to the sides of the containing vessels; but the coats of the artery, by any small impetus, may be distended: therefore, upon the contraction or systole of the heart, the blood from the left ventricle will not only press the blood in the artery forwards, but both together will distend the sides of the artery: when the impetus of the blood against the sides of the artery ceases; that is, when the left ventricle ceases to contract, then the spiral fibres of the artery, by their natural elasticity, return again to their former state, and contract the channel of the artery, till it is again dilated by the diastole of the heart: this diastole of the artery is called its pulse, and the time the spiral fibres are returning to their natural state, is the distance between two pulses: this pulse is in all the arteries of the body at the same time; for, while the blood is thrust out of the heart into the artery, the artery being full, the blood must move in all the arteries at the same time; and because the arteries are conical, and the blood moves from the basis of the cone to the apex, therefore the blood must strike against the sides of the vessels, and consequently every point of the artery must be dilated at the same time that the blood is thrown out of the left ventricle of the heart; and as soon as the elasticity of the spiral fibres can overcome the impetus of the blood, the arteries are again contracted: thus two causes operating alternately, the heart and fibres of the arteries, keep the blood in a continual motion: an high pulse is either vehement or strong, but if the dilatation of the artery does not rise to its usual height, it is called a low or weak pulse; but if between its dilatations there passes more time than usual, it is called a slow pulse: again, if the coats of an artery feel harder than usual from any cause whatsoever, it is called an hard pulse; but if by any contrary cause they are softer, then it is called a soft pulse. Quincy.

Think you, I bear the shears of destiny?

Have I commandment on the pulse of life? Shakspeare.

The property of the neighbour kingdoms is not inferior to that of this, which, according to the pulse of states, is a great diminution of their health. Clarendon.

My body is from all diseases free;

My temperate pulse does regularly beat. Dryden.

If one drop of blood remain in the heart at every pulse, those, in many pulses, will grow to a considerable mass. Arb.

2. Oscillation; vibration; alternate expansion and contraction; alternate approach and recession.

The vibrations or pulses of this medium, that they may cause the alternate fits of easy transmission and easy reflection, must be swifter than light, and by consequence above seven hundred thousand times swifter than sounds. Newton.

3. To feel one's PULSE. To try or know one's mind artfully.

4. [From puls.] Leguminous plants.

With Elijah he partook,

Or as a guest with Daniel at his pulse. Milton.

Mortals, from your fellows blood abstain!

While corn and pulse by nature are bestow'd. Dryden.

Tares are as advantageous to land as other pulses. Mort.

To PULSE. v. n. [from the noun.] To beat as the pulse.

The heart, when separated wholly from the body in some animals, continues still to pulse for a considerable time. Ray.

PULSION. n. f. [from pulsus, Lat.] The act of driving or of forcing forward: in opposition to suction or traction.

Admit it might use the motion of pulsion, yet it could never that of attraction. More's Divine Dialogues.

PUM

By attraction we do not here understand what is improperly called so, in the operations of drawings, sucking and pumping, which is really pulsion and traction. Boyle.

PULVERABLE. adj. [from pulveris, Lat.] Possible to be reduced to dust.

In making the first ink, I could by filtration separate a pretty store of a black pulverable substance that remained in the fire. Boyle on Colours.

PULVERIZATION. n. f. [from pulverizare.] The act of powdering; reduction to dust or powder.

To PULVERIZE. v. a. [from pulveris, Lat. pulveriser, Fr.] To reduce to powder; to reduce to dust.

If the experiment be carefully made, the whole mixture will shoot into fine crystals, that seem to be of an uniform substance, and are consistent enough to be even brittle, and to endure to be pulverized and sifted. Boyle.

PULVERULENCE. n. f. [pulverulentus, Lat.] Dustiness; abundance of dust.

PULVIL. n. f. [pulvillum, Lat.] Sweet scents.

The toilette, nursery of charms,

Completely furnish'd with bright beauty's arms,

The patch, the powder-box, pulvils, perfumes. Gay.

To PULVIL. v. a. [from the noun.] To sprinkle with perfumes in powder.

Have you pulvilled the coachman and postilion, that they may not stink of the stable. Congreve's Way of the World.

PUMICE. n. f. [pumex, pumicis, Lat.]

The pumice is evidently a slag or cinder of some fossil, originally bearing another form, and only reduced to this state by the violent action of fire: it is a lax and spongy matter full of little pores and cavities, found in masses of different sizes and shapes, of a pale, whitish, grey colour: the pumice is found in many parts of the world, but particularly about the burning mountains Etna, Vesuvius and Hecla: it is used as a dentifrice. Hill's Materia Medica.

So long I shot, that all was spent,

Though pumice stones I hastily hent,

And threw; but nought avail'd.

Etna and Vesuvius, which consist upon sulphur, shoot forth smoke, ashes and pumice, but no water. Bacon.

Near the Lucrine lake,

Steam of sulphur raise a stifling heat,

And through the pores of the warm pumice sweat. Aldrich.

PUMMEL. n. f. See POMMEL.

PUMP. n. f. pompe, Dutch and French.]

1. An engine by which water is drawn up from wells: its operation is performed by the pressure of the air.

A pump grown dry will yield no water, unless you pour a little water into it first. More's Discourse against Atheism.

In the framing that great ship built by Hiero, Athenaeus mentions this instrument as being instead of a pump, by the help of which one man might easily drain out the water though very deep. Wilkins's Description.

These pumps may be made single with a common pump handle, for one man to work them, or double for two. Martinet.

2. A shoe with a thin sole and low heel.

Get good strings to your beards, new ribbons to your pumps. Shakspeare, Midsummer Night's Dream.

Gabriel's pumps were all unpink'd i' th' heel. Shakspeare.

Follow me this jest, now, till thou hast worn out thy pump, that when the single sole of it is worn, the jest may remain singular. Shakspeare, Romeo and Juliet.

Thalia's ivy shews her prerogative over comical poetry; her mask, mantle and pumps are ornaments belonging to the stage. Peacock.

The water and sweat

Spillish splash in their pumps. Swift's Miscell.

To PUMP. v. n. [pompen, Dutch.] To work a pump; to throw out water by a pump.

The folly of him, who pumps very laboriously in a ship, yet neglects to stop the leak. Deacy of Pity.

To PUMP. v. a.

1. To raise or throw out by means of a pump.

2. To examine artfully by fly interrogatories, so as to draw out any secrets or concealments.

The one's the learned knight, seek out,

And pump them what they come about. Hudibras.

Ask him what passes

Amongst his brethren, he'll hide nothing from you;

But pump not me for politics. Ortney's Venice Preserv'd.

PUMPER. n. f. [from pump.] The person or the instrument that pumps.

The flame lasted about two minutes, from the time the pumper began to draw out air. Boyle.

PUMPION. n. f. A plant.

The flower of the pumpion consists of one leaf, which is bell-shaped, expanded at the top, and cut into several segments: of these flowers some are male, and some female, as in the cucumbers and melons: the female flowers grow upon the top of the embryo, which afterwards becomes an oblong or round fleshy fruit, having sometimes an hard, rugged and uneven uneven rind, with knobs and furrows, and is often divided into three parts, inclosing flat seeds that are edged or rimmed about as it were with a ring, and fixed to a spongy placenta. Miller.

We'll use this gross watry pumpion, and teach him to know turtles from jays. Shakspeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

PUN. n. f. [I know not whence this word is to be deduced: to pun, is to grind or beat with a pelle; can pun mean an empty sound, like that of a mortar beaten, as clench, the old word for pun, seems only a corruption of clink?] An equivocation; a quibble; an expression where a word has at once different meanings.

It is not the word, but the figure that appears on the medal: coniculus may stand for a rabbit or a mine, but the picture of a rabbit is not the picture of a mine: a pun can be no more engraven, than it can be translated. Addison.

But fill their purse, our poet's work is done,

Alike to them by paths, or by pun. Pope.

To PUN. v. n. [from the noun.] To quibble; to use the same word at once in different senses.

The hand and head were never loft, of those Who dealt in doggrel, or who pun'd in prose. Dryden.

You would be a better man, if you could pun like Sir Tristram. Tatler, N° 57.

To PUNCH. v. a. [poinçonner, Fr.] To bore or perforate by driving a sharp instrument.

When I was mortal, my anointed body

By thee was punched full of deadly holes. Shakspeare.

By reason of its constitution it continued open, as I have seen a hole punched in leather. Wifeman's Surgery.

Your work will sometimes require to have holes punched in it at the forge, you must then make a steel punch, and harden the point of it without tempering. Mexon.

The fly may, with the hollow and sharp tube of her womb, punch and perforate the skin of the epica, and cast her eggs into her body. Ray on the Creation.

PUNCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A pointed instrument, which, driven by a blow, perforates bodies.

The flank of a key the punch cannot strike, because the flank is not forged with substance sufficient; but the drill cuts a true round hole. More's Mechanical Exercises.

2. [Cant word.] A liquor made by mixing spirit with waters, sugar, and the juice of lemons.

The West India dry gripes are occasioned by lime juice in punch. Arbutnot on Aliments.

No brute can endure the taste of strong liquor, and consequently it is against all the rules of hiroyglyph to assign those animals as patrons of punch. Swift.

3. [Punchinello, Italian.] The buffoon or harlequin of the puppet-show.

Of rarefactions he sung and punch's feats. Gay.

4. Punch is a horse that is well set and well knit, having a short back and thin shoulders, with a broad neck, and well lined with flesh. Farrier's Dict.

5. [Punchio obesa, Lat.] In contempt or ridicule, a short fat fellow.

PUNCHION. n. f. [poinçon, Fr.]

1. An instrument driven so as to make a hole or impression.

He granted liberty of coining to certain cities and abbeys, allowing them one staple and two punchions at a rate. Camd.

2. A measure of liquids.

PUNCHER. n. f. [from punch.] An instrument that makes an impression or hole.

In the upper jaw are five teeth before, not incisors or cutters, but thick punchers. Grew's Musaeum.

PUNCTILIO. n. f. A small nicety of behaviour; a nice point of exactness.

Common people are much astonished, when they hear of those solemn contests which are made among the great, upon the punctilio of a publick ceremony. Addison.

Punctilio is out of doors, the moment a daughter clandestinely quits her father's house. Clarissa.

PUNCTILIOUS. adj. [from punctilio.] Nice; exact; punctual to superflition.

Some depend on a punctilious observance of divine laws, which they hope will atone for the habitual transgression of the rest. Rogers's Sermons.

PUNCTILOUSNESS. n. f. [from punctilious.] Nicety; exactness of behaviour.

PUNCTRO. n. f. [punct, Spanish.]

1. Nice point of ceremony.

The final conquest of Granada from the Moors, king Ferdinand displayed in his letters, with all the particularities and religious punctes and ceremonies that were observed in the reception of that city and kingdom. Bacon's Henry VII.

2. The point in fencing.

— To see thee here, to see thee there, to see thee pass thy puncte. Shakspeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

PUNCTUAL. adj. [punctus, Fr.]

1. Comprised in a point; consisting in a point.

PUN

This earth a spot, a grain,
An atom with the firmament compar'd,
And all her number'd stars, that seem to rowl Spaces incomprehensible; for such
Their distance argues, and their swift return
Diurnal, merely to officiate light Round this opacous earth, this punctual spot. Milton.

2. Exact; nice; punctilious.

A gentleman punctual of his word, when he had heard that two had agreed upon a meeting, and the one neglected his hour, would say of him, he is a young man then. Bacon.

This mistake to avoid, we must observe the punctual differences of time, and so distinguish thereof, as not to confound or lose the one in the other. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

That the women are menstruent, and the men pubescent at the year of twice seven, is accounted a punctual truth. Bro.

He was punctual and just in all his dealings. Auterbury.

The correspondence of the death and sufferings of our lord is so punctual and exact, that they seem rather like a history of events past, than a prophecy of such as were to come. Rogers.

PUNCTUALITY. n. f. [from punctual.] Nicety; scrupulous exactness.

For the encouragement of those that hereafter should serve other princes with that punctuality as Sophronio had done, he commanded him to offer him a blank, wherein he might set down his own conditions. Harrod's Vocal Forge.

Though some of these punctualities did not so much conduce to preserve the text, yet all of them shew, the infinite care which was taken, that there might be no mistake in a single letter. Grew's Cypsel.

PUNCTUALLY. adv. [from punctual.] Nicely; exactly; scrupulously.

There were no use at all for war or law, if every man had prudence to conceive how much of right were due both to and from himself, and were withal so punctually just as to perform what he knew requisite, and to rest contented with his own. Raleigh's Essays.

Concerning the heavenly bodies, there is so much exactness in their motions, that they punctually come to the same periods to the hundredth part of a minute. Ray on the Creation.

I freely bring what Moles hath related to the test, comparing it with things as now they stand; and finding his account to be punctually true, I fairly declare what I find. Woodward.

PUNCTUALNESS. n. f. [from punctual.] Exactness; nicety.

The most literal translation of the scriptures, in the most natural signification of the words, is generally the best; and the same punctualists, which debase other writings, preserve the spirit and majesty of the sacred text. Falton.

PUNCTUATION. n. f. [punctum, Lat.] The act or method of pointing.

It ought to do it willingly, without being forced to it by any change in the words or punctuation. Addison.

PUNCTURE. n. f. [punctus, Lat.] A small prick; a hole made with a very sharp point.

With the loadstone of Laurentius Guafcus, whatsoever needles or bodies were touched, the wounds and punctures made thereby were never felt. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Nerves may be wounded by scission or puncture: the former way being cut through, they are irrecoverable; but when pricked by a sharp-pointed weapon, which kind of wound is called a puncture, they are much to be regarded. Wifeman.

To PUNCTULATE. v. n. [punctulatum, Lat.] To mark with small spots.

The fluids have their surface punctulated, as if set all over with other fluids infinitely teller. Woodward.

PUNDLE. n. f. [mulier punita & obesa, Lat.] A short and fat woman.

PUNG-R. n. f. [pugur, Lat.] A fish.

PUNGENCY. n. f. [from pungent.]

1. Power of pricking.

Any substance, which by its pungency can wound the worms, will kill them, as steel and hartshorn. Arbutnot.

2. Heat on the tongue; acridness.

3. Power to pierce the mind.

An opinion of the successfulness of the work is as necessary to found a purpose of undertaking it, as the authority of commands, the persuasiveness of promises, pungency of menaces, or prospect of mischiefs upon neglect can be. Hamn.

4. Acrimoniousness; keenness.

When he hath considered the force and pungency of these expressions applied to the fathers of that Nicene synod by the Western bishops, he may abate his rage towards me. Stillings.

PUNGENT. adj. [pungens, Lat.]

1. Pricking.

Just where the breath of life his nostrils drew,
A charge of snuff the wily virgin threw;
The gnomes direct to every atom just,
The pungent grains of irritating dust. Pope's Ra. of the Lock.

2. Sharp on the tongue; acrid.

Do not the sharp and pungent tastes of acids arise from the strong attraction, whereby the acid particles rush upon, and agitate the particles of the tongue. Newton's Opticks.

3. Piercing;

PUN

3. Piercing; sharp.
Thou canst set him on the rack;
Inclose him in a wooden tow'r,
With pungent pains on ev'ry side;
So Regulus in torments dy'd. Swift's Miscellanies.
4. Acrimonious; biting.
It confits chiefly a sharp and pungent manner of speech;
but partly in a facetious way of jesting. Dryden.
- PUNICE. n. f. A wallouse; a bugg. Hudibras. Answer.
- PUNICEOUS. adj. [puniceus, Lat.] Purple. Ditt.
- PUNINESS. n. f. [from puny.] Pettiness; smallness.
- TO PUNISH. v. a. [puniō, Lat.]
  1. To chastise; to afflict with penalties or death for some crime.
Your purpos'd low correction
Is such, as baste and the meanest wretches Are punished with. Shakep. King Lear.
If you will not hearken, I will punish you seven times more for your sins. Leo. xxvi. 18.
  2. To revenge a fault with pain or death.
PUNISHABLE. adj. [punibilis, Fr. from punis.] Worthy of punishment; capable of punishment.
Theft is naturally punishable, but the kind of punishment is positive, and such lawful, as men shall think with discretion convenient to appoint. Hooker, b. iii. f. 9.
Such creatures, which have no understanding, can show no will; and where no will is, there is no sin; and only that which sinneth, is subject to punishment; which way should any such creature be punishable by the law of God? Hooker.
Their bribery is less punishable, when bribery opened the door by which they entered. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
PUNISHABLENESS. n. f. [from punishable.] The quality of deserving or admitting punishment.
  - PUNISHER. n. f. [from punish.] One who inflicts pains for a crime.
This knows my punisher; therefore as far From granting me, as I from begging peace. Milton.
  - PUNISHMENT. n. f. [punishment, Fr.] Any infliction imposed in vengeance of a crime.
The house of endless pain is built thereby,
In which ten thousand sorts of punishments
The cursed creatures do eternally torment.
Unless it were a bloody murderer, Shakep.
I never gave them condign punishment. 2 Mac. viii. 36.
Thou, through the judgment of God, shalt receive just punishment for thy pride.
Is not destruction to the wicked? and a strange punishment to the workers of iniquity? Jab. xxxi. 3.
Had I a hundred mouths, a hundred tongues,
I could not half those horrid crimes repeat,
Nor half the punishments those crimes have met. Dryden.
The rewards and punishments of another life, which the Almighty has established, as the enforcements of his law, are of weight enough to determine the choice, against whatever pleasure or pain this life can show. Locke.
  - PUNITION. n. f. [punition, Fr. punitive, Lat.] Punishment. Ans.
  - PUNITIVE. adj. [from punis, Lat.] Awarding or inflicting punishment.
Neither is the cylinder charged with sin, whether by God or men, nor any punitive law enacted by either against its rolling down the hill. Hammond's Fundamentals.
  - PUNITORY. adj. [from punio, Lat.] Punishing; tending to punishment.
  - PUNK. n. f. A whore; a common prostitute; a strumpet.
She may be a punk; for many of them are neither maid, widow, nor wife. Shakep. Measure for Measure.
And made them fight, like mad or drunk,
For dame religion as for punk. Hudibras.
Near these a nursery erects its head,
Where unfledg'd actors learn to laugh and cry,
Where infant punks their tender voices try. Dryden.
  - PUNSTER. n. f. [from pun.] A quibbler; a low wit who endeavours at reputation by double meaning.
His mother was cousin to Mr. Swan, gamester and punster of London. Arbutnot and Pope.
  - TO PUNT. v. n. To play at ballet and ombre.
One is for setting up an assembly for ballet, where none shall be admitted to punt, that have not taken the oaths. Add.
When a duke to Janfen punts at White's,
Or city heir in mortgage melts away,
Satan himself feels far less joy than they. Pope.
  - PUNY. adj. [pui nē, Fr.]
    1. Young.
    2. Inferior; petty; of an under rate.
Is not the king's name forty thousand names?
Arm, arm, my name; a puny subject strikes
At thy great glory. Shakep. Rich. II.
Know me not,
Left that thy wives with spits, and boys with stones,
In puny battle slay me. Shakep. Coriolanus.
Drive
The puny habitants; or if not drive,
Seduce them to our party. Milton.

PUP

- This friendship is of that strength, as to remain unshaken by such assaults, which yet are strong enough to shake down and annihilate the friendship of little puny minds. Swift.
Jove at their head ascending from the sea,
A shoal of puny pow'rs attend his way. Dryden.
- PUPPY. n. f. A young unexperienced unseasoned wretch.
Tenderness of heart makes a man but a puppy in this sin;
it spoils the growth, and cramps the crowning exploits of this vice. South's Sermons.
- TO PUP. v. n. [from puppy.] To bring forth whelps; to breed a bitch bringing young.
- PUPIL. n. f. [pupilla, Lat.]
  1. The apple of the eye.
Looking in a glass, when you shut one eye, the pupil of the other, that is open, dilateth. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Setting a candle before a child, bid him look upon it, and his pupil shall contract itself very much to exclude the light; as when after we have been some time in the dark, a bright light is suddenly brought in and set before us, till the pupil of our eyes have gradually contracted. Ray on the Creation.
The uvea has a muculous power, and can dilate and contract that round hole in it, called the pupil of the eye. Mere.
The rays, which enter the eye at several parts of the pupil, have several obliquities to the glasses. Newton's Opticks.
  2. [Pupilla, Fr. pupillus, Lat.] A scholar; one under the care of a tutor.
My master sues to her, and she hath taught her tutor,
He being her pupil, to become her tutor. Shakep.
One of my father's servants,
With store of tears this treason 'gan unfold,
And said my guardian would his pupil kill. Fairfax.
If this arch-politician find in his pupils any remorse, any fear of God's future judgments, he persuades them that God hath so great need of men's souls, that he will accept them at any time, and upon any condition. Raleigh.
Tutors should behave reverently before their pupils. L'Estr.
The great work of a governor is, to settle in his pupils good habits, and the principles of virtue and wisdom. Locke.
  3. A ward; one under the care of his guardian.
Tell me, thou pupil to great Pericles,
What are the grounds
To undertake to young so vast a care? Dryden.
So some weak fool, which else would poorly sit,
Jove's tree adopts, and lifts him to the skies;
Through the new pupil softening juices flow,
Thrust forth the gems, and give the flow'rs to blow. Tidd.
- PUPILAGE. n. f. [from pupil.]
  1. State of being a scholar.
The severity of the father's brow, whilst they are under the discipline of pupilage, should be relaxed as fast as their age, discretion, and good behaviour allow. Locke.
  2. Wardship; minority.
Three sons he dying left, all under age,
By means whereof their uncle Vertigen
Usurp'd the crown, during their pupilage;
Which the infant's tutors gathering to fear,
Them closely into Armorick did bear. Fairfax.
- PUPILARY. adj. [pupillaris, Fr. pupillaris, Lat. from pupil.]
Pertaining to a pupil or ward.
- PUPPET. n. f. [puppet, Fr. pupus, Lat.]
  1. A small image moved by men in a mock drama;
a tragedian.
Once Zelmane could not stir; but that as if they had been puppets, whose motion food only upon her pleasure, Bassilius with serviceable steps, Gynecia with greedy eyes would follow her. Sidney, b. ii.
Divers of them did keep in their houses certain things made of cotton wool, in the manner of puppets. Arbut.
His last wife was a woman of breeding, good humour and compliance; as for you, you look like a puppet moved by clock-work. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
As the pipes of some carv'd organ move,
The gilded puppets dance. Pope.
In florid impotence he speaks,
And, as the prompter breathes, the puppet squeals. Pope.
  2. A word of contempt.
Thou, an Egyptian puppet, shalt be shewn
In Rome as well as I. Shakep. Cymbeline.
Oh excellent motion! oh exceeding puppet! Shakep.
- PUPPETMAN. n. f. [puppet and man.] Master of a puppet-show.
Why is a handsome wife ador'd
By every coxcomb but her lord?
From yonder puppetman inquire,
Who wisely hides his wood and wire. Swift.
- PUPPETSHOW. n. f. [puppet and show.] A mock drama performed by wooden images moved by wire.
Tim. you have a taste I know, Swift.
And often see a puppetshow. Arbutnot and Pope.
To induce him to be fond of learning, he would frequently carry him to the puppetshow. A pre.

PUR

- A president of the council will make no more impression upon my mind, than the light of a puppetshow. Pope.
- PUR. n. f. [pupus, Fr.]
  1. A whelp; progeny of a bitch.
He
Talks as familiarly of roaring lions, Shakep.
As maids of thirteen do of puppy dogs.
The rogues fled into the river with as little remorse, as they would have drowned a bitch's blind puppies, fifteen of the litter. Shakep. Merry Wives of Windsor.
The sow to the bitch says, your puppies are all blind. L'Estr.
Nature does the puppy's eyelid close,
Till the bright fun has nine times set and rose. Gay.
  2. A name of contemptuous reproach to a man.
I shall laugh myself to death at this puppy headed monster;
a most curvy monster! Shakep. Tempest.
Thus much, as I have added, because there are some puppies which have given it out. Raleigh.
I found my place taken up by an ill-bred awkward puppy, with a money bag under each arm. Addison's Guardian.
- TO PURRY. v. n. [from the noun.] To bring whelps.
- PURBLIND. adj. [corrupted from perblind, which is still used in Scotland; per and blind.] Nearighted; shortighted.
Speak to my gossip Venus one fair word,
One nickname to her perblind son and heir. Shakep.
The truth appears so naked on my side,
That any perblind eye may find it out. Shakep.
'Tis known to several
Of head piece extraordinary; lower messes
Perchance, are to this business perblind. Shakep.
Like to perblind moles, no greater light than that little which they flume. Drummond.
Darkness, that here surrounded our perblind understandings, will vanish at the dawning of eternal day. Boyle.
Drop in clear thick-sighted eyes,
They'd make them see in darkest night,
Like owls, though perblind in the light. Hudibras.
- Perblind man
Sees but a part o' th' chain, the nearest links;
His eyes not carrying to that equal beam,
That circles all above. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.
- PURBLINDNESS. n. f. [from perblind.] Shortness of sight.
- PURCHASABLE. adj. [from purchase.] That may be purchased or bought.
Money being the counterbalance to all things purchaseable by it, as much as you take off from the value of money, to much you add to the price of things exchanged for it. Locke.
- TO PURCHASE. v. a. [purchase, Fr.]
  1. To buy for a price.
You have many a purchase d slave,
Which like your asses, and your dogs and mules,
You use in abject and in slavish part. Shakep.

A world who would not purchase with a bruise. Milton.
  3. To expiate or recompense by a fine or forfeit.
I will be deaf to pleading and excuses;
Nor tears nor prayers shall purchase out abuses;
Therefore use none. Shakep. Romeo and Juliet.
- PURCHASE. n. f. [purchase, old Fr. from the verb.]
  1. Any thing bought or obtained for a price.
He that procures his child a good mind, makes a better purchase for him, than if he laid out the money for an addition to his former acres. Locke on Education.
Our thriving dean has purchas'd land;
A purchase which will bring him clear
Above his rent four pounds a year. Swift.
  2. Any thing of which possession is taken.
A beauty wailing and distressed widow Made prize and purchase of his wanton eye;
Seduc'd the pitch and height of all his thoughts
To base declension. Shakep.
The fox repairs to the wolf's cell, and takes possession of his stores; but he had little joy of the purchase. L'Estrange.
- PURCHASER. n. f. [from purchase.] A buyer; one that gains any thing for a price.
Upon one only alienation and change, the purchase is to pass both licence, fine and recovery.
So unhappy have been the purchases of church lands, that, though in such purchases, men have usually the cheapest pennyworths, yet they have not always the best bargains. South.
Most of the old statues may be well supposed to have been cheaper to their first owners, than they are to a modern purchase. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

Thou pure stone, whose pureness doth present
My pure mind. Sidney, b. ii.

PUR

3. Unmingled; not altered by mixtures; mere.
What philosophy shall comfort a villain, that is hal'd to the rack for murdering his prince? his cup is full of pure and unmingled sorrow, his body is rent with torment, his name with ignominy, his soul with shame and sorrow, which are to last eternally. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
Pure and mixt, when applied to bodies, are much a kin to simple and compound; so a guinea is pure gold, if it has in it no alloy. Watts's Logic.
4. Not connected with any thing extrinick: as, pure mathematics.
Mathematicks in its latitude is divided into pure and mixed; and though the pure do handle only abstract quantity in the general, as geometry; yet that which is mixed doth consider the quantity of some particular determinate subject. Willis.
When a proposition expresse that the predicate is connected with the subject, it is called a pure proposition; as every true christian is an honest man. Watts.
5. Free; clear.
His mind of evil pure
Supports him, and intention free from fraud. Philips.
6. Free from guilt; guiltless; innocent.
Who can say, I have made my heart clean, I am pure from my sin? Prov. xx. 9.
O welcome pure ey'd faith,
And thou unblemish'd form of chastity. Milton.
No hand of strife is pure, but that which wins. Daniel.

against the king, was purely due to him, and the effect of his power. Clarendon, b. viii.
Upon the particular observations on the metallick and mineral bodies, I have not founded any thing but what purely and immediately concerns the natural history of those bodies. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
I converse in full freedom with men of both parties; and if not in equal number, it is purely accidental, as having made acquaintance at court more under one ministry than another. Swift.
- PURENESS. n. f. [from pure.]
  1. Clearness; freedom from extraneous or foul admixtures.
They came to the river side, which of all the rivers of Greece had the prize for excellent pureness and sweetness, in so much, as the very bathing in it was accounted exceeding healthful. Sidney.
No circumstances are like to contribute more to the advancement of learning, than exact temperance, great pure- ness of air, equality of climate, and long tranquility of government. Temple.
  2. Simplicity; exemption from composition.
An essence eternal and spiritual, of absolute pureness and simplicity. Raleigh.
My love was such,
It could, though he supply'd no fuel, burn;
Rich in itself, like elemental fire,
Whole pureness does no aliment require. Dryden.
  3. Innocence; freedom from guilt.
May we evermore serve thee in holiness and pureness of living. Common Prayer.
  4. Freedom from vitious modes of speech.

Even to the guilt or the purgation. Shaksp.
PURGATIVE. adj. [purgativ, Fr. purgativus, Lat.] Cathartic; having the power to cause evacuations downward.
Purging medicines have their purgative virtue in a fine spirit, they endure not boiling without loss of virtue. Bacon.
All that is fill'd, and all that which doth fill
All the round world, to man is but a pill;
In all it works not, but it is in all Poisonous, or purgative, or cordial.
Lenient purgatives evacuate the humours. Denne.
PURGATORY. n. f. [purgatorium, Fr. purgatorium, Lat.] A place in which souls are supposed by the papists to be purged by fire from carnal impurities, before they are received into heaven.
Thou thy folk, through pains of purgatory,
Dost bear unto thy bliss. Spenser's Hymn on Love.
In this age, there may be as great influences produced of real charity, as when men thought to get souls out of purgatory.
Stillingfleet.
To PURGE. v. a. [purger, Fr. purge, Lat.]
1. To cleanse; to clear.
It will be like that labour of Hercules, in purging the stable of Augeas, to separate from superfluous observations any thing that is clean and pure natural. Bacon.

virtue, and take away the unpleasant taste of the purge. Eac.

PURIFICATION, n. f. [purification, Fr. purificatio, Lat.]

1. The act of making pure ; act of cleansing from extraneous mixture.

I discerned a considerable difference in the operations of several kinds of faltpetre, even after purification. Blyth.

2. The act of cleansing from guilt.

The sacraments, in their own nature, are just such as they seem, water, and bread, and wine ; but because they are made signs of a secret mystery, and water is the symbol of purification of the soul from sin, and bread and wine, Christ's body and blood ; therefore the symbols receive the names of what they sign. Taylor's Worlhy Communicant.

3. A rite performed by the Hebrews after childbearing.

PURIFICATIVE, adj. [from purify]. Having power or ten-p*urificatory*. s dency to make pure.

the waters, and would in proportion require a greater time to be purified. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

By chase our long-lived fathers earn'd his food,
Toil strung the nerves, and purified the blood. Dryden.

3. To make clear.

It ran upon so fine and delicate a ground, as one could not easily judge, whether the river did more wash the gravel, or the gravel did purify the river. Sedg. b. ii.

4. To free from guilt or corruption.

He gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people. Tit. ii. 14.

If God gives grace, knowledge will not stay long behind ;
hence it is the same spirit and principle that purifies the heart, and clarifies the understanding. South's Sermon.

5. To free from pollution, as by lustration.

There were fex fix water pots of stone, after the manner of the purifying of the Jews. Jo. ii.

6. To clear from barbarisms or impurities.

He saw the French tongue abundantly purified. Sprot.

To PURIFY, v. n. To grow pure.

We do not suppose the separation of these two liquors wholly finished, before the purgation of the air began, though let them begin to purify at the same time. Burnet.

PURIST, n. f. [purifies, Fr.] One superficially nice in the use of words.

PURITAN, n. f. [from pure]. A sectary pretending to eminent purity of religion.

The schism which the papists on the one hand, and the superstition which the puritan on the other, lay to our charge, are very justly chargeable upon themselves. Sandys.

PURITANICAL, adj. [from puritan]. Relating to puritans.

Such guides for ever the several congregations will mislead them, by infilling into them puritanical and superstitious principles, that they may the more securely exercise their prebyterian tyranny. Wheat.

PURITANISM, n. f. [from puritan]. The notions of a puritan.

A serious and impartial examination of the grounds, as well of popery as puritanism, according to that measure of understanding God hath afforded me. Walton.

PURITY, n. f. [puritas, Fr. puritas, Lat.]

1. Cleanness ; freedom from foulness or dirt.

 ships of, were the ornus or wild ash; the fir was likewise used for this purpose. Arbutnot.
 I do this, on purpose to give you a more sensible impression of the imperfection of your knowledge. Watts.
 Where men err against this method, it is usually on purpose, and to shew their learning. Swift.
 2. Effect; consequence.
 To small purpose had the council of Jerusalem been assembled, if once their determination being set down, men might afterwards have defended their former opinions. Hobbes.
 The ground will be like a wood, which keepeth out the sun, and so continueth the wet, whereby it will never graze, to purpose that year. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 Their design is a war, whenever they can open it with a prospect of succeeding to purpose. Temple.
 Such first principles will serve us to very little purpose, and we shall be as much at a loss with, as without them, if they may, by any human power, such as is the will of our teachers, or opinions of our companions, be altered or lost in us. Dafce.
 He that would relish success to purpose, should keep his passion cool, and his expectation low. Collier on Desires.
 What the Romans have done is not worth notice, having had little occasion to make use of this art, and what they have of it to purpose being borrowed from Aristotle. Baker.
 3. Intance; example.
 'Tis common for double-dealers to be taken in their own innces, as for the purpose in the matter of power. Leff.
 To PURPOSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To intend; to design;
 to resolve.
 What he did purpose, it was the pleasure of God that Solomom his son should perform.
 It is a purpose of nobility, and grows by plot,
 To curb the nobility. Shakspeare. Coriolanus.
 I am purposed, that my mouth shall not transgress. Pf. xvii.
 This is the purpose that is purposed upon the whole earth. Jf. xiv. 26.
 Paul purposed in the spirit, to go to Jerusalem. Acts xix. 21.
 To christian captains, purposing to retire home, placed on each side of the army four ranks of waggon. Kneller.
 The wife included rare his purpose'd prey.
 Oaths were not purpose'd more than law,
 To keep the good and just in awe,
 But to confine the bad and sinful,
 Like moral cattle in a pinfold. Hudibras.
 Doubling my crime, I promise and deceive,
purpose to slay, whilst I swearing to forgive.
 Prior.

PUR

- PURPOSELY, adv. [from purpose.] By design; by intention.
Being the instrument which God hath purposefully framed, thereby to work the knowledge of salvation in the hearts of men, what cause is there wherefore it should not be acknowledged a most apt mean? Hooker.
I have purposefully avoided to speak any thing concerning the treatment due to such persons. Addison.
In composing this discourse, I purposefully declined all offensive and displeasing truths. Atterbury.
The vulgar thus through imitation err,
As oft the learned by being singular;
So much they scorn the crowd, that if the throng
By chance go right, they purposefully go wrong. Pope.
PURPRISE, n. f. [purpris, old Fr. purprism, law Lat.] A cloth or inclosure; as also the whole compass of a manour.
The place of justice is hallowed; and therefore not only the bench, but the foot-pace and precincts, and purprise ought to be preserved without corruption. Bacon's Essays.
PURR, n. f. A sea lark. Anjov. vlt.
PURR, v. a. To murmur as a cat or leopard in pleasure.
PURSE, n. f. [boerse, Fr. purse, Welsh.] A small bag in which money is contained.
She bears the purse too; she is a region in Guiana all gold and bounty. Shakep. Merry Wives of Windsor.
Shall the son of England prove a thief,
And take purse? Shakep. Henry IV.
He sent certain of the chief prisoners, richly apparelled with their purse full of money, into the city. Kneller.
I will give him the thousand pieces, and, to his great surprise, present him with another purse of the same value. Add.
TO PURSE, v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To put into a purse.
I am spell-caught by Philidel,
And purse d within a net. Dryden.
I purse d it up, but little reck'ning made,
'Till now that this extremity compell'd,
I find it true. Milton.
2. To contract as a purse.
Thou cried'st,
And did'st contract and purse thy brow together,
As if thou then had'st shut up in thy brain
Some horrible conceit. Shakep. Othello.
PURSENET, n. f. [purse and net.] A net of which the mouth is drawn together by a string.
Conies are taken by *purse*nets in their burrows. Mortimer.
PURSEPROUD, adj. [purse and proud.] Puffed up with money.
PURSER, n. f. [from purse.] The paymaster of a ship.
PURSENESS, n. f. [from purse.] Shortness of breath.
PURSEVENESS, n. f. [from purse.] Shortness of breath.
PURSLAIN, n. f. [portulaca, Lat.] A plant.
The flower of purslain consists of many leaves, which expand in form of a rosette, out of whose flower-cup, which consists of one leaf, arises the point, which, together with the flower-cup, becomes a fruit, for the most part oval, full of small seeds, and furnished with two shells or husks at top; of which the outer one, which was the part of the flower-cup that was split in two, opens first; and the inner one, which is the point enlarged, opens last, doubly and transversely, while the lower part of the flower-cup adheres to the foot-stalk. Miller.
The medicaments, proper to diminish the milk, are lettice, purslain and endive. Wifeman's Surgery.
PURSUABLE, adj. [from purse.] What may be pursued.
PURSUANCE, n. f. [from purse.] Prosecution; process.
PURSUANT, adj. [from purse.] Done in consequence or prosecution of any thing.
TO PURSUE, v. a. [pursuere, Fr.]
1. To chase; to follow in hostility.
Love like a shadow flies, when substance love pursues;
Pursuing that that flies, and flying what pursues. Shakep.
When Abram heard that his brother was taken captive, he armed his trained servants, and pursued. Gen. xiv. 14.
To thy speed add wings,
Left with a whip of scorpions I pursue Milton.
Thy lingering,
2. To prosecute; to continue.
As righteousness tendeth to life; so he that pursueth evil, pursueth it to his own death. Prov. xii. 19.
Infatiate to pursue Milton.
Vain war with heaven.
I will pursue Dryden.
This ancient story, whether false or true.
When men pursue their thoughts of space, they stop at the confines of body, as if space were there at an end. Locke.
3. To imitate; to follow as an example.
The fame of ancient matrons you pursue,
And stand a blameless pattern to the new. Dryden.
4. To endeavour to attain.
Let us not then pursue Milton.
Splendid vassalage.
We happiness pursue; we fly from pain;
Yet the pursuit, and yet the flight is vain. Prior.

PUR

- TO PURSUE, v. n. To go on; to proceed.
I have, pursues Carneades, wondrous chymists should not confider. Boyle.
PURSUER, n. f. [from purse.] One who follows in hostility.
Fled with the rest,
And falling from a hill he was so bruised,
That the pursuers took him. Shakep. Henry IV.
His swift pursuers from heav'n's gates discern
Th' advantage, and descending tread us down Thus drooping. Milton's Par. Lost, b. i.
Like a declining statesman left forlorn
To his friends pity and pursuers scorn. Denham.
PURSUITE, n. f. [pursuite, Fr.]
1. The act of following with hostile intention.
Arm, warriors, arm for fight! the foe at hand,
Whom fild we thought, will have us long pursuit. Milton.
2. Endeavour to attain.
This means they long propos'd, but little gain'd,
Yet after much pursuit, at length obtain'd. Dryden.
Its honours and vanities are continually passing before him, and inviting his pursuit. Rogers.
He has annexed a secret pleasure to the idea of any thing that is new or uncommon, that he might encourage us in the pursuit after knowledge, and engage us to search into the wonders of his creation. Addison.
The will, free from the determination of such desires, is left to the pursuit of nearer satisfactions, and to the removal of those uneasinesses it feels in its longings after them. Locke.
3. Prosecution.
He concluded with sighs and tears, to conjure them, that they would no more prels him to give his consent to a thing so contrary to his reason, the execution whereof would break his heart, and that they would give over further pursuit of it. Clarcken.
PURSUIVANT, n. f. [pursuivant, Fr.] A state messenger;
an attendant on the heralds.
How oft do they with golden pinions cleave
The flitting skies, like flying pursuivants. Fairy Queen.
Pursuivants he often for them sent. Alabard.
These grey locks, the pursuivants of death,
Argue the end of Edmund Mortimer. Shakep.
Send out a pursuivant at arms
To Stanley's regiment; bid him bring his power
Before sun-rising. Shakep. Richard III.
For helmets, crests, mantles, and supporters, I leave the reader to Edmund Bolton, Gerard Leigh, John Ferne, and John Guillim Portsmouth, pursuivants of arms, who have diligently laboured in armory. Camden's Remains.
The pursuivants came next,
And like the heralds each his fustoon bore. Dryden.
PURSY, adj. [purssif, Fr.] Shortbreathed and fat.
In the fatness of these purisy times,
Virtue itself of vice must pardon beg,
Yea court and woo for leave to do it good. Shakep.
Now breathless wrong
Shall sit and pant in your great chairs of ease,
And purisy insolence shall break his wind
With fear and horrid flight. Shakep. Timon of Athens.
By these, the Medes Perfume their breaths, and cure old purisy men. Temple.
An hostels dowager,
Grown fat and purisy by retail
Of pots of beer and bott'd ale. Hudibras, p. iii.
PURTEANCE, n. f. [appertenance, Fr.] The pluck of an animal.
Roast the lamb with fire, his head with his legs and with the purteance thereof. Ex. xii. 9.
The shaft against a rib did glance,
And gall'd him in the purteance. Hudibras, p. i.
TO PURVEY, v. a. [poursuivre, Fr.]
1. To provide with conveniences. This sense is now not in use.
Give no odds to your foes, but do purvey
Yourself of sword before that bloody day. Fa. Queen.
His house with all convenience was purvey'd, Dryden.
The rest he found.
2. To procure.
What though from outmost land and sea purvey'd
For him; each rarer tributary life Bleeds not. Thompson's Summer.
TO PURVEY, v. n. To buy in provisions.
I the praise
Yield thee, so well this day thou hast purvey'd. Milton.
PURVEYANCE, n. f. [from purvey.]
1. Provision.
Whence mounting up, they find purveyance meet
Of all, that royal princes court became. Fa. Queen.
2. Procurement of victuals.
Some lands be more changeable than others; as for their lying near to the borders, or because of great and continual purveyances that are made upon them. Bacon.
PURVEYOR, n. f. [from purvey.]
1. One that provides victuals.
The purveyors or victuallers are much to be condemned, as not a little faulty in that behalf. Raleigh.
2. A procurer; a pimp.
These women are such cunning purveyors!
Mark where their appetites have once been pleased,
The same resemblance in a younger lover,
Lies brooding in their fancies the same pleasures. Dryden.
The stranger, ravish'd at his good fortune, is introduced to some imaginary title; for this purveyor has her representatives of some of the finest ladies. Addison.
PURVIEW, n. f. [poursuivre, French.] Proviso; providing clause.
Though the petition expresses only treason and felony, yet the act is general against all appeals in parliament; and many times the purview of an act is larger than the preamble or the petition. Hale's Common Laws of England.
PURULENCE, n. f. [from purulent.] Generation of pus or purulency; matter.
Consumptions are induced by purulency in any of the viscera. Arbutnot on Diet.
PURULENT, adj. [purulent, Fr. purulentus, Lat.] Consisting of pus or the running of wounds.
A carcase of man is most infectious and odious to man, and purulent matter of wounds to sound flesh. Bacon.
It spews a filthy froth
Of matter purulent and white,
Which happen'd on the skin to light,
And there corrupting on a wound,
Spreads leprosy. Swift's Miscel.
An acrimonious or purulent matter, stagnating in some organ, is more easily deposited upon the liver than any other part. Arbutnot on Aliments.
PUS, n. f. [Latin.] The matter of a well digested food.
Acrid substances break the vessels, and produce an ichor instead of laudable pur. Arbutnot.
TO PUSH, v. a. [pusher, Fr.]
1. To strike with a thrust.
If the ox push a man-servant, he shall be stoned. Ex. xxi.
2. To force or drive by impulse of any thing.
The youth push away my feet. Job xxx. 12.
3. To force not by a quick blow, but by continued violence.
Shew your mended faiths,
To push destruction and perpetual shame
Out of the weak door of our fainting land. Shakep.
Through thee will we push down our enemies. Pf. xlv. 5.
Waters forcing way,
Sidelong had push'd a mountain from his seat,
Half sunk with all his pines. Milton.
The description of this terrible scene threw her into an hysterick fit, which might have proved dangerous, if Cornelius had not been push'd out of the room. Arbutnot and Pope.
4. To press forward.
He forewarns his care
With rules to push his fortune or to bear. Dryden.
With such impudence did he push this matter, that when he heard the cries of above a million of people begging for their bread, he termed it the clamours of faction. Addison.
Arts and sciences, in one and the same century, have arrived at great perfection, and no wonder, since every age has a kind of universal genius, which inclines those that live in it to some particular studies, the work then being pushed on by many hands, must go forward. Dryden.
5. To urge; to drive.
Ambition pushes the soul to such actions, as are apt to procure honour to the actor. Addison's Spectator.
6. To enforce; to drive to a conclusion.
We are pushed for an answer, and are forced at last freely to confess, that the corruptions of the administration were intolerable. Swift.
7. To importune; to tease.
TO PUSH, v. n.
1. To make a thrust.
But issues, ere the fight, his dread command,
That none shall dare
With shorted sword to stab in closer war,
Nor push with biting point, but strike at length. Dryden.
A calf will so manage his head, as though he would push with his horns even before they shoot. Roy.
Lambs, though they never saw the actions of their species, push with their foreheads, before the budding of a horn. Addison.
2. To make an effort.
War seem'd asleep for nine long years; at length
Both sides resolv'd to push, we try'd our strength. Dryden.
3. To make an attack.
The king of the South shall push at him, and the king of the North shall come against him. Dan. xi. 40.
PUSH, n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Thrust; the act of striking with a pointed instrument.

PUS

- Ne might his corse be harmed
With dint of sword or push of pointed spear. Spenser.
So great was the puillance of his push,
That from his saddle quite he did him bear. Fa. Queen.
They, like resolute men, stood in the face of the breach, receiving them with deadly shot and push of pikes, in such furious manner, that the Turks began to retire. Kneller.
2. An impulse; force impressed.
Love was not more
With infant nature, when his spacious hand
Had rounded this huge ball of earth and seas
To give it the first push, and see it roll Along the vast abyss. Addison's Guardian.
3. Assault; attack.
He gave his countenance against his name,
To laugh with gybing boys, and stand the push
Of every beardless vain comparative. Shakep. Henry IV.
When such a resistance is made, these bold talkers will draw in their horns, when their fierce and feeble pushes against truth are repelled with pushing and confidence. Watts.
4. A forcible struggle; a strong effort.
A sudden push gives them the overthrow;
Ride, ride, Mellala. Shakep.
Away he goes, makes his push, stands the shock of a battle, and compounds for leaving of a leg behind him. L'Estrange.
We have beaten the French from all their advanced posts, and driven them into their last entrenchments: one vigorous push, one general assault will force the enemy to cry out for quarter. Addison.
5. Exigence; trial.
We'll put the matter to the present push. Shakep.
'Tis common to talk of dying for a friend; but when it comes to the push, 'tis no more than talk. L'Estrange.
The question we would put, is not whether the sacrament of the mals be as truly propitiatory, as those under the law?
but whether it be as truly a sacrifice? if so, then it is a true proper sacrifice, and is not only commemorative or representative, as we are told at a push. Atterbury.
6. A sudden emergence.
There's time enough for that;
Left they desire, upon this push, to trouble
Your joys with like relation. Shakep. Winter's Tale.
7. [Pushula, Lat.] A pimple; an efflorescence; a wheal.
He that was praised to his hurt, should have a push rise upon his nose; as a blister will rise upon one's tongue, that tells a lie. Bacon's Essays.
PUSHER, n. f. [from push.] He who pushes forward.
PUSHING, adj. [from push.] Enterprising; vigorous.
PUSHPIN, n. f. [push and pin.] A child's play, in which pins are pushed alternately.
Men, that have wandering thoughts at the voice of wisdom out of the mouth of a philosopher, deserve as well to be whipt, as boys for playing at pushpin, when they should be learning. L'Estrange.
PUSILLANIMITY, n. f. [pussillanimité, Fr. pussillus and animus, Lat.] Cowardice; meanness of spirit.
The property of your excellent sherris is the warming of the blood, which, before cold and settled, left the liver white and pale, the badge of pussillanimity and cowardice. Shakep.
The Chinese sail where they will; which sheweth, that their law of keeping out strangers is a law of pussillanimity and fear. Bacon's New Atlantis.
It is obvious, to distinguish between an act of courage and an act of rashness, an act of pussillanimity and an act of great modesty or humility. South's Sermons.
PUSILLANIMOUS, adj. [pussillanimité, Fr. pussillus and animus, Lat.] Mean spirited; narrow minded; cowardly.
An argument fit for great princes, that neither by overmeasuring their forces, they lose themselves in vain enterprises;
nor, by undervaluing them, descend to fearful and pussillanimous counsels. Bacon's Essays.
He became pussillanimous, and was easily ruffled with every little passion within; supine, and as openly exposed to any temptation from without. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
What greater instance can there be of a weak pussillanimous temper, than for a man to pass his whole life in opposition to his own sentiments. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup> 576.
PUSILLANIMOUSNESS, n. f. [from pussillanimous.] Meanness of spirit.
PUSS, n. f. [I know not whence derived; puss, Lat. is a dwarf.]
1. The fondling name of a cat.
A young fellow, in love with a cat, made it his humble suit to Venus to turn puss into a woman. L'Estrange.
Let puss practise what nature teaches. Watts.
I will permit my son to play at apodidracinda, which can be no other than our puss in a corner. Arbutnot and Pope.
2. The sportsman's term for a hare.
It grieves my heart to see thee thus;
But hounds eat sheep as well as hares. Goy.
PUSTULE, n. f.

PUS

From the sole of the foot, even unto the head, there is no soundness in it, but wounds, and bruises, and putrefying sores. Is. i. 6.
All imperfect mixture is apt to putrefy, and watry substances are more apt to putrefy than oily. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
These hymns, though not revive, embalm and spice
The world, which else would putrefy with vice. Donne.
The pain proceeded from some acrimony in the serum, which, falling into this declining part, putrefied. Wijeman.
- PUTRESCENCE. n. f. [from putresco, Latin.] The state of rotting.
Now if any ground this effect from gall or choler, because being the fiery humour, it will readiest surmount the water, we may confes in the common putrescence, it may promote elevation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- PUTRESCENT. adj. [putrescent, Lat.] Growing rotten.
Aliment is not only necessary for repairing the fluids and solids of an animal, but likewise to keep the fluids from the putrescent alkaline state, which they would acquire by constant motion. Arbutnot on Aliments.
